"At about 8 a.m. Gen. Keller, who was directing the fight around, deemed it necessary to lend assistance to Gen.

We are satisfied that under good management the municipal tele phone system can be successfully operated. We estimate that a 500 telephone exchange in Brantford at $15 for residence and $25 for business places could be operated so as to meet all financial obligations.

"There are 70 of us who are to be ruined by this bylaw, and we mean to fight it to the privy council if neces-sary. The bulk of my day's work is after 8 o'clock, when men are free to come to the barbers whose stores are near their home. From 7.30 o'clock in the morning until 8 at night I only take in $2 per day, and it is impos-sible for me to live on that. I shall be in the police court to-morrow for the first time in my life, but my live-lihood and that of my family depend on a strong fight against this thing and we are soing to fight it." Other barbers said the same thing. The reason is that are dwindles the question into a Maclean issue rather than a public issue. He wraps himself around with it like a garment, and will not share it with anybody. He argues for it so maladroitly that those who believe in it doubt themselves. He makes

It necessary to lend assistance to Gen. Kashtalinsky's column by bringing up from the general reserve three bat-talions to the heights surmounted by the temple. In order to maintain the positions we had already occupied, it was necessary, owing to the enemy's pressure, to reinforce immediately with other reserves the troops in the fighting line, but these positions, owing to their situation, were untenable. Gen. Keller found the strength of the enemy so great, compared with ours, that he decided not to continue the fight and not to bring up either the special or the general reserves, especially in view the general reserves, especially in view of the fact that in case of his ultimate-ly taking the offensive it would be ne-cessary to attack without support of field artillery. "Our losses have not yet been exactly escertained, but Gen. Keller reports Another thing that is displeasing to that they exceed 1000. The gallant 24th Regiment suffered most. Gen. Of course not, except he might tell us that, like the camp-follower, we were following the good cause because we knew they were successful and successful of course by reason of his unaided exertions.

Mr. Maclean is not making the headway he should with questions that meet with considerable public approval, and he need not look for the reason in the wrongheadedness of others, but in his own self-sufficiency.

Mr. Malone or Mr. Atkinson, either of them, is free to run for a constituency, and, winning it, show the maladroit Maclean how to do his work better. When they have done so he will be glad to turn the fight over to them, and to fight behind them. He admits his many weaknesses and his lack of superior qualities, admits that "he is most unfit" and freely acknowledges that he is only doing what he, a very ordinary everyday man, can do toward helping on the public interest. In the meantime Mr. Malone and Mr Atkinson might let the public know who in parliament is willing to do the work for which "the Maclean" is so "unfit." In the meantime also we might be allowed to remark that it is such an easy thing to carry on a fight of this kind in a chamber where the government party and the opposition, the officers of the house and the press gallery, most of them, are bent on destroying the issue in the house, and, out of the house, pouring ridicule on it and those who fight for it. The one thing that enables Mr. Maclean to make any fight at all is that he has a newspaper to back him up.

As for The Star, it says "it believes in many of the things he [Mr. Maclean] advocates." It shows its belief by "knocking" every effort in behalf of these things made by him. That's the way to help a move. ment along!
