THE REPORT OF MR. ADAMS.

The long-expected final report of Water Expert Adams has arrived, in part. All the material upon which his deductions are Based is not yet available, but it is the conclusions and recommendations the public cares more particularly about and will study with the greatest amount of interest.

Mr. Adams sets forth the essential facts as gleaned by him from the data supplied by the officials of the corporation. They are brought out so clearly that the wayfaring man without expert knowledge may thoroughly comprehend them. He estimates that with an expenditure of approximately half a million dollars on improvements of various kinds sufficient water for the requirements of a population of fiftyeight thousand people may be drawn not quite three million gallons of water per day, an increase in capacity of less than one million gallons per
