OPPOSITION MEETING.

Dr. Stockton and Mr. Hazen give the Hartland People Opposition Gospel

At the hour appointed for meeting two or three hundred people were ready to listen to Dr. Stockton, the Opposition Leader, and Dr. Hazen, his co-worker. Allan Rideout officiated as chairman. Seated on the platform were, besides the two speakers of the evening, J. K. Pinder, M. P. P., of York, J. T. A. Dibblee, M. P. P., Hon. G. W. White, Capt. Anderson, J. K. Fleming and representatives of the "Press" and ADVERTISER. The 67th Batt. band began the show by a lively strain, after which the chairman spoke a few well chosen words of introduction.

Mr. Pinder was the first speaker and expressed himself as glad of the opportunity for addressing a Hartland audience. He spoke of the just cause that impelled Mr. Dibblee to forsake his party; spoke of the exorbitant prices of material that entered the construction of bridges and other public works. Of the $66,000 expended on great roads and bridges $35,000 was given out without tenders. He proceeded to give a detailed account of the expenditure and showed where building materials were bought often 100 per cent. higher than they might have been. "We claim a right for tenders," said he. The government steadfastly refused to give fully detailed accounts of expenditure on permanent bridge accounts to the Opposition. He showed that the Record Foundry received so large a share of provincial patronage because of the direct interest the Premier himself had in it. If Woodstock bridge had been built as it should have been the people of Hartland might have had a bridge today. "However when we get in you will stand a fair chance for a bridge. But we are not in—we're out!" Regarding the "wheat policy" Mr. Pinder said the farmers know when it is best to sow wheat; what N. B. wants is a husbanding of the pork packing industry. He further pointed out that Julius Inches actually received $1000 as payment for resigning his position of secretary of agriculture, to give Peters of Kings an office so he wouldn't oppose A. S. White in the election.

Mr. Dibblee didn't expect to speak, he said, but he welcomed his honored confreres to Carleton county, and further wished to state his reasons for opposing the government. With regard to the Moncton convention, he could say the move met with his strong approval, but before that he was opposed to the Emmerson government. As a member of the public accounts committee, bills came before him he could not endorse. Not liking his opposition the government insinuated that his usefulness had expired. Mr. Dibblee claimed excessive prices had been paid for printing, hardware, etc. He did not, however, condemn the government for all of its policy. He felt confident of a return at the coming election. The one question above all that interested the Hartland people was the bridge. At his own suggestion a delegation was sent. The government said it was impossible to build a bridge at present, but asked if the Hartland people had any plans or suggestions, upon hearing which they promised if a local company was formed they would guarantee the interest at 3 per cent. for 15 or 20 years. They said an order in council would be granted at the next meeting of the government, but it has not yet come, "I am strongly in favor of a bridge for you. The opposition will build as good a bridge as any party. We will do all we can for you."

J. K. Fleming was glad for the opportunity of speaking. The bridge was uppermost in his mind apparently. The speakers to-night would give practical talk; while the government on the morrow would tell all about the bridge, as of yore. The government will be overthrown. They could have ere this built the Hartland bridge if they had been prudent and careful in their exchequer. Economy must be exercised. Referring to the motto on the wall—"We will vote for the party who will give us a bridge," he said it should be "We will vote against the party who did not give us a bridge." The speaker was loudly applauded.

Hon. G. W. White spoke a few minutes in his usual breezy and witty style, which brought him loud applause.

Mr. Hazen took the floor and said, "We were solicited to meet the people of Hartland here to-night, and expected to meet the government speakers. He spoke of the Moncton convention, commending its resolution to conduct the provincial politics on party lines. He cited many good and logical reasons why the move was best. Mr. Hazen is a remarkably fluent and gifted orator, and has provincial affairs in thorough comprehension. His denunciation of the government was an admirable piece of work from a rhetorical standpoint. He told how the various government supporting newspapers pulled cash from the public treasury, and how ridiculous was Mr. Tweedie's opposition to the Moncton convention. Emmerson knows his party would speedily collapse if he depended upon the Liberals of the province for support. Mr. Hazen then drifted into Dominion politics.

Dr. Stockton was received with applause. He stated that he expected to meet the government. He didn't wonder Mr. Emmerson didn't dare to meet him, as he spoke untruthfully about his politics. He was a Conservative; he had supported the party seven years. He thought the premier must be a lineal descendant of Ananias. Dr. Stockton defended Mr. Dibblee's turnover. British justice would impel a
