A HEROINE NEW IS NOW ON VIEW

At the Star, Which the East Side Jams; She Foils the Plot

In a Common Trot; Makes the Villains Look Like Hams— Again Does Sin, With Fiendish Din, Succumb to Virtue's Ways—The Play, It Teaches Aspiring Peaches to be Good — It Pays, It Pays.

Of all the ladies in the land, there's none so sweet as Lottie, she has the other ladies named, and I on her are dainty.

—Stuffy Davis, Lotta Ellegartum.

There was Bertha, queen of the sewing machine, who worked like a Trojan slave to keep her name unscathed from blame and to make the village of Woodside famous; but Nellie is a Used to Beem; there is Edna, the Typewriter Pretty, who pounds on the keyboard keys with all the beauty of Helen of Troy and the wisdom of Socrates; too many by far the heroines of the melodramatic stage to print. Their names and their despatches would reach to the sporting page. And is the best of the acid test, young heroines? None of these. It is Lottie, the Poor Slesidley, Penultimate accent, please. By the time she's paid her der paint! By the beads of the balcony gods! Ye shall hear how Lottie foiled the plot in the face of tremendous odds. There was never a skirt with half the virtue of Lottie Love. Never! No sir! Hear of the sad, and she had and learn about women from her.

Ye shall send your way to the matinee and see the show at the Star. Ye shall learn, ye shall learn of the temptations are.

Ye have wanted your way to the matinee, and this is the villain (current). Now Randolph comes and a sabbat his goes around on the lower floor, for the au-dience they know these gens, they have seen his kind before. And they were hep, for every step that he took was in Vio's path, and how can one choke one's love of recitade or one's righteous wrath?

But all are not soured in the waves of crime and soaked in the storms of vice. Frank Mason, the clerk and buyer, is not; in fact, he is awfully nice and honest and truthful and noble and brave and fearless and handsome as Hackett and Hillard and Drew and Oleett and Sobern and Pavy. Now this is the fate of that swell looking male; how they made his life a hell; get next, get next to the following text. The plot is beginning to jell.

This Stelway stop put Lot on the job to work in his millinery shop, and he got new with this maiden who was

FOR SALE—Well established and good paying grocery business for sale in a first class locality. Terms cash. Two three charges were made upon the crowd, who retired to the back streets. They returned again, however to the attack and poured in further battalions of stones. The mob was taken in flank, however, by a detachment of infantry and police, who advanced from the rear of the barracks. The troops charged with fixed bayonets, and the police used their batons vigorously. The crowd melted away at once before the combined military and police onslaught, and the party returned to the barracks with thirty prisoners, nearly all of whom had wounds. Many others who had been badly handled escaped. The situation grew more serious as darkness approached, and British-General Dawson, with other leading officers, arrived on the scene. The Riot Act was read but the mob only greeted the reading with shouts of the "bloody Saxons." It was then that the most terrible scenes of carnage which have been described took place.

The following is a list of the civilian victims of the rioting so far as it was obtainable:

KILLED.

Magie Lennon, single woman, aged 22, of 52 Conway street; shot through the side.

Charles McMillan, 27 Conway street, iron-turret; shot through the lungs, died fifteen minutes later, at 144 Ross street.

Charles Kelly, of 43 Norfolk street.

DANGEROUSLY WOUNDED.

E. J. McCormick, Hugh Delany, Patrick McEenna, Wm. J. McEenna.

Miss Lennon was in no way concerned with the rioting of her young brother, and had gone to the end of the street with the object of persuading him to go home when the shot was fired. She was shot through the right side, the right side, the bullet tearing its way through the clothing of a muslin dress. She was shot through the right side, and she had a mill worker general certificate in the sick list at time of writing.

Wm. Higgins was out to the base ball club Saturday, bringing his Gramophone and spent the evening at H. Howlett's.

Mr. Arch Howlett is on the sick list at time of writing.

INCIDENTS CONNECTED WITH THE RECENT REVOLT OF IRISH CONSTABULARY

The 3rd Dragoon Guards dashed through the main streets to the beached barracks at a hand gallop, followed by detachments of infantry. Two three charges were made upon the crowd, who retired to the back streets. They returned again, however to the attack and poured in further battalions of stones. The mob was taken in flank, however, by a detachment of infantry and police, who advanced from the rear of the barracks. ### LOTS DOING

(Victoria County News)

Not seeing any items from here for some time, thought I would let you know we were still living.

If you want to see a place that is improving fast just come along this way, you will see all kinds of work going on some building or repairing other buildings, other building cells. O. Mallison is here drilling wells, we wonder who will be his agent.

Mrs. Donald Downmaster was unfortunate in the loss of a valuable mare, the team ran away the mare falling down and breaking its leg so that she had to be killed.

Congratulations are in order at Fred Howlett's on the arrival of a 11 lb. boy.

Dan. Downmaster built a fine in the school house.

Mrs. Donald Downmaster gives us fine music. Some of our girls are taking music lessons.

LITERARY NOTE

A striking divorce article entitled "Why American Marriages Fail," by Mrs. Anna A. Rogers of Washington, D. C., appears in the September Atlantic. Her theory is that in nine divorces out of ten, the wife is to be blamed. She says that her marriage is the great duty and work in life, while of necessity with the husband business profession divides his interest. Mrs. Rogers holds that American women are overfed, over-dressed, and over-ill. The frantic and extensive shopping noted in our large cities, the devotion to personal vanities, and the general extravagance of living are all signs that making a home and dwelling therein does not fill the modern woman's hours. As the writer herself is a woman, the article exhibits a peculiar sympathy; moreover, it is, in the main, optimistic. It is a wise, deliberate, and clarifying treatment of a perplexed subject.

Dr. and Mrs. Melvin will leave by the steamer Yale this evening for New York, via Boston. Dr. Melvin will attend the International Dermatological Congress, which will be held in New York, and expects to be absent about ten days.

It is clear that an inquiry into the whole course of affairs is inevitable, and if not ordered by the military, will be demanded by public opinion. All acts and parties in the riot are to be investigated, and no one is to be spared. The military do not shut it. The representatives of the police at the Inquest declared that they do not think that it is right to take place at the earliest possible moment, and it must be wide, thorough and impartial.

Of all the ways of advertising, the best, most certain and cheapest is that using the columns of a good newspaper. Intelligent people with money to spend always read the papers—Press and Printer.
