that a buoy which was driven ashore November 3 last contained a notice that the buoy was set adrift July 24, 1900, near Cape Bathurst and about 284 miles northeast of the Mackenzies. Cape Bathurst is in British America, on the Arctic Ocean, lying in lat. 70 degrees 39 minutes north, long, 127 degrees 39 minutes north, long, 127 degrees 39 minutes east. It is believed here that the buoy, which thus drifted more than eight years, was carried through the Polar Seas between Greenland and Spitzbergen.

If this is, no, it would seem to support the conclusions on which Captain Roald Amundsen has based his furne expedition on the Fram.

Captain Amundsen's expedition on the Fram will start from San Francisco early in 1910. He plans a drifting voyage similar to that undertaken by Nansen.
