POETRY.

A COUNTRY HOME FOR ME.

I do not ask that city spires
May stand my mansion near,
But that my home may be where trees
Are pointing to the skies;
Where flowers the silvery mountain rill
With a sweet and merry sound,
And the echo of the hunter's gun,
Shall through the woods resound.

I cannot love the city pomp,
Its fashion and its pride;
I had rather dwell in a humble cot
Upon the mountain side,
Where sweetly blooms the acacia tree,
The tulip and the rose,
And where, beside the rivulet,
The early violet grows.

I would not give my quiet home,
Its happiness and health,
For all the city palaces,
Its pleasures and its wealth;
I love to breathe the mountain air,
And roam where all is free,
Let others chose a city life,
But a country home for me.

VARIETY.

THE BOW OF PROMISE.—I remember watching from the summit of yon lofty cliff, a ships career, expecting every moment it would be wrecked—dashed to pieces upon horrid rocks, where no help could come. I shall never forget it. When all but lost, they cast another, but still drifted towards the shore; the waves run to the sky, the highest cliffs were drenched with spray and foam—balls floated for miles like driven snow; the poor vessel now stood on end reeled to and fro seemed engulfed by the tremendous billows came again to view, but still drifted though slowly to the shore which no boat could reach; the jagged rocks, when uncovered by the surge looked like the jaws of some great sea-monster, waiting for his prey. They cut down the masts, and then held their ground; but for many hours it was an anxious time, so many lives depended upon a cable's strength; every moment we expected that it would yield to the apalling fury of the storm; a dark cloud hung on the horizon behind the ship in dismal contrast with the white sea foam; more than once, when destruction seemed most imminent, came a broad rainbow on the cloud it was a promise of hope, a path down which good spirits slid to bid waves grow still—and at length the storm abated and the ship was safe. And sometimes on the dark cloud which hangs on the social horizon, come dreams of rainbow light and they will prove as true messengers of hope as those you remember on that exciting day; good spirits will descend on them, and bid the storm of life grow still. During that storm were many ready to help, some fit to lend in rendering any assistance that might be possible to the imperilled crew, but the rainbow had departed, its last fading hue disappeared for many hours before its promise was fulfilled, but it did not fail. Let no one hesitate to believe that human progress will be overwhelmed by no storm, will suffer shipwreck or no fatal cast; it may be retarded, driven out of its course by hostile blasts; the waves of passion, ignorance, and selfishness may roar around, but they will destroy it; when danger is most impending, it will find safety by ancoring on eternal truth; a gleam of promise will appear on the darkest cloud; and sooner or later, calm seas and fair winds will proclaim, in joyous accents, that Hope's prophesy was true.—Slack.

THE ORIGIN OF THE WORD 'ROUNDHEAD.'—At the same time that Oliver Cromwell was moving the House of Commons against popishly inclined counsellors of state, his cousin an old acquaintance John Williams, Archbishop of York, had committed himself and his brother prelates to a step which precipitated the downfall of Episcopacy in England, and moved the House of Lords to their dubious position into something like renewed harmony with the Lower House. Monday the 27th of Dec. memorable we have just seen, for several remarkable proceedings within the walls of the two Houses—was a stormy day out of doors in their immediate neighbourhood. The appointment of Lunsford had been revoked by the king the preceding evening; but the news did not spread soon enough to prevent the assemblage of excited crowds in Parliament-yard, who came on various rumours of violent designs against the popular party in the two Houses, and to obtain an answer to the petitions they had presented to Parliament. Through this agitated mass of people the archbishop was endeavouring to make his way to the House of Lords, in company of the Earl of Dover, when, irritated by the outcry against bishops which greeted him on all sides, he seized hold of a lad who seemed to be a ringleader, and attempted to drag him away in custody. Of course the mob turned upon the archbishop and rescued his prisoner with loud shouts of 'No bishops!' The archbishop escaped without personal injury; but a conflict was nearly occasioned by one David Hide, one of the disbanded northern soldiery enlisted for the war in Ireland, who drew his sword, and swore he would cut the throats of the Roundheaded dogs that bawled against bishops. 'Which passionate expression,' says Rushworth, as far as I could ever learn, was the first minting of that term or compellation of Roundheads which afterward grew so general.—Sanford's Illustration of the Great Rebellion.

MARRIAGE.—It is the happiest and most virtuous state of society, in which the husband and wife set out early together, made their property together, and with perfect sympathy of soul graduate all their expenses, plans, calculations, and desires, with reference to their present means, and to their future common interests. Nothing delights me more than to enter the tenement of the young couple, who perhaps within two or three years, without any resources but their own knowledge and industry, have joined heart and hand engaged to share the responsibilities, duties, interests, trials and pleasures of life. The industrious wife is cheerfully using her own hands in domestic duties, putting her house in order, or mending her husbands clothes, or preparing the dinner whilst, perhaps, the little darling sits prattling upon the floor, or lies sleeping in the cradles—and everything seems preparing to welcome the happiest of husbands and the best of fathers when he shall come from his toil to enjoy the sweets of his little paradise. This is true domestic happiness, the only bliss that survived the fall. Health, contentment love, abundance and bright prospects are all. But it has become a prevalent sentiment that a man must acquire his fortune before the marries—that the wife must have no sympathy, no share with him in the pursuit of it, in which most of the pleasure truly consists; and the young married people must set out with as large and expensive an establishment as is becoming those who have been wedded for twenty years. This is very unhappy. It fills the community with bachelors who are waiting to make their fortunes, encouraging vice and promoting sloth—it destroys the true economy and design of the damest institution, and it promotes idleness and deficiency among females, who are expecting to be taken up by a fortune and passively sustained, without any care and concern on their part; and thus many a wife becomes as a gentleman once remarked, not a 'help-mate,' but a 'help eat.'

A sleepy deacon who sometimes engaged in popular gain, hearing the minister close his remarks with "shake off this mortal coil" started up, rubbed his eyes, and exclaimed "Hold on, its my deal."

Jim thinks pain everything to me. His wife has a bald head, and he strops his razor on it—the strop.
