In the following account by the Herald reporter rather exceeds any we have ever met with.
If cannot refrain from giving an account of the building of; a very small steam engine, the materials of which were picked up in different parts of the State and suited to their proper places at the leisure of the builders. A description of the materials used, and where procured will be of interest, and any one anxious to procure relics of the war would find in this small engine a whole

The steam pipe is a silver pen holder, as also the exhaust pipe: The steam whistle is composed of several pieces; the head the mouthpiece of a bugle, the cap a cartridge of Spencer's repeating rifie, and the pob the tip of a bayonet scabbard. The hub of the flywheel is the plug of a shell fuse. The four spokes are made from a Springfield musket ramrod, the rim from a Springfield musket ramrod, the rim from a center table taken at the Spottsylva-nia Court House. The safety valve is another piece of bugle, helped out by a piece of lightning rod taken from a mill at Rappabannock station. The beam of the valve is a cavalryman's buckle filed down; the weight a knob of a bureau drawer from Spottsylvania Court House; two try cocks from Fairbanks' scales, taken at Bappahan nock station.
