The New Zealand kakapo, or large parrot, with all its credit for brains, allows itself to be caught in a very simple manner. In the dusk of the early dawn the Maoris, carrying tame kakapos tied to long sticks, set off to hunt. These are the call-birds used to attract by their screams the large flocks of kakapos flying overhead. When one Maori tethers the call-birds by the leg, and sets them screaming to the full extent of their lusty lungs, another cuts as many perches as there are men in the hunting party from the neighboring bush. By means of flax bands these are lashed firmly to different parts of a little hut or "whare" (in which the hunters secrete themselves), so as to act as Work a specialty.
