During the present season a regular line of steamers will ply between Dawson and the head of navigation on the Stewart river. High authorities in imperial polities agree that the mantle of Lord Salisbury will, in all human probability, fall upon Joseph Chamberlain. The secretary for the colonies is undoubtedly the most popular man, in Great Britain. His theories of imperial unity as carried into effect during the prosecution of the South African war, have established him so firmly in public confidence that no conceivable circumstance could now arise to dislodge him. He possesses the energy, aggressiveness and withal the. tact to meet the multitudinous problems that are arising out of the tremendous competition for the world's trade, with which Great Britain must hereafter contend. He recognizes the potential strength of Britain-beyond-seas as no other statesman of the time has done, and understands in what manner that strength may best be conserved and rendered available in the great task of working out the manifest destiny that lies before the British empire. eals are beginning to foreshadow Mr. Chamberlain's advancement to the John Howard, Milo Roberts and others presented a petition in reference to the O'Brien bridge leading to Klondike city. The petitioners deny that the franchise held by O'Brien is exclusive in its nature and insist that it was given, as well as the franchise for the upper ferry, by Thomas Fawcett "in a case of em ergency." The toll now being collected is heavy and unjust and should not be allowed. A free highway is desired between Dawson and Klondike city and the mayor and council are petitioned to request the Yukon council to either purchase the present pridge or authorize the construction of another within close proximity.

New bills presented included one from the Nugget for $10; W. F. Campbell for services at the quara itine station, $150; Water Company, $15; Mendham the jeweler, for making the city seal, $100.

The company has in contemplation the putting in of such a system of water works which if tilized by the city would affect a considerable saving in the cost of maintenance of the fire department, but would also largely increase its efficiency.

There being some doubt as to whether the new fire regulations had been properly put through, to make sure Alderman Norquay moved their adoption which was carried.
