The London "Advertiser" says the opponents of woman suffrage who have insisted that the women do not desire the ballot, find that the returns from the school elections, held through out Kansas Thursday, do not justify their claims. The increase in women votes in one year was nearly 100 percent. The elections were held in the country districts, and the results show that the farmers' wives and daughters are abreast of the equal suffrage movement. The outlook is that the equal suffrage amendment to be voted on in Kansas next year will be carried by a big majority. Why not? Women are half the laws; why should they not assist in making and enforcing them?
