Charles Stewart Parnell.

The downfall of Charles Stewart Parnell, the able and talented leader of the Irish Home Rule party, is a blow from which his respectable followers wil hardly recover. It is true that many of the agitators, like Dillon, Gill. Har rington and others of that stamp, care little or nothing for the moral disgrace of their leader, still there are others who feel the stroke most bitterly. He has been the idol of the Home Rulers, and there appears to be no one to take his place at present. The American papers, which have been his most ar dent champions, predict his utter over throw as leader of the party. The New York Herald admits that the collapse of the defence in the O'Shea of O'Connell it is no longer possible for tion him to conduct the Home Rule move ment. The Pall Mall Gazette says It is Parnell's duty to the Irish people, their English allies, his own character and his cause, to resign his leadership.

Many of the Irish Bishops and their according to the condition of the trade Irish cause by drooping his own reputation in the mire. It would be better for the unionists to have Parnell remain and tar the whole Home Rule party with the dirty brush with which he has besmirched himself than to have him resign. A wise and honorable man would temporarily retire and would repair by marriage the false position in which he has put his partner in his
