> As I sat at my window this morning, I saw at least half a dozen delivery wagons of various kinds go by at a rattling pace-sometimes a fast 1.50 trot, sometimes a pathetically feeble gallop. Two or three stopped within my line of vision and I watched the horses stand panting, and sometimes even trembling and shaking, while the boy went into the house and saw them lashed into a gallop again as soon as the boy had clambered back into his seat.

Two or three of the horses were ery old. One was a light carriage orse that should never have been put nto a heavy delivery team at all. Now all delivery horses have a hard enough time with their long routes and old stops, even if they are allowed to at a reasonable pace, but perpetual irry breaks down a horse even more quickly than it does a man and it was
