Notes and Comments.

The opportunity offered by the wedding of the daughter of the Kaiser to Prince Ernest August of Cumberland, is being availed of by Germany to give the King and Queen of England a right royal welcome. It is to be hoped that the coolness which prevailed during the latter part of the reign of Victoria and King Edward between the courts of these countries, will be removed, and that much warmer feelings will prevail in future.

The real danger point in the friction between Britain and Germany has never been the Courts, and this we state while we bear in mind the indiscreet cablegram of congratulation sent by the Kaiser to President Kruger during Britain's darkest hour, in South Africa. On the one hand, Victoria was always averse to war, Edward in his short reign earned the cognomen of Peace-maker and the present King is following faithfully in the firm footsteps of his father and grandmother. On the other hand, though the Kaiser is looked upon as the War Lord of Europe, his reign of twenty-five years has been eminently peaceful. Germany has not engaged in any wars during that period.

While the Courts of both countries have used their influence for peace, during the last decade or so, the friction between Britain and Germany has increased, and at times been so great, that the heat generated threatened an explosion of the first magnitude. The friction has been mainly due to trade rivalry. War if it ever comes, will be due to this cause. Germany came late into the world market as a big competitor with Britain, but she is now a formidable one, and her overseas traffic is fortified by a navy which is also a new creation, but is also most formidable. We may think what we like of armoured-plate patriotism, but this great armament combine could not stimulate and maintain a huge trade in armaments, had it not this rivalry for the markets of the world to work upon.

The monarchs of both countries may do much to lessen the friction, abate the heat of the rivalry and assuage the passions which now and then rise to a white heat. King Edward set his son a glorious example in the Anglo-French entente. King Edward had the distrust of centuries to remove, but he succeeded by tact, judgment, and good fellowship in creating a new relation between historic enemies.

Just as King Edward had his opportunity for earning a glorious title on the scroll of true fame, so has King George. King Edward's difficulties were great, and perhaps King George's are greater. The rivalries of Britain and France were largely ancient and inherited. Those of Britain and Germany are new, acute and sore. But they are mainly matters of manufacture, trade and commerce, and all these are the handmaids of Peace, which must suffer dire disaster should passion rule and an intestine war break out between the two greatest belligerents in the world. Trade rivalry is, however, but one aspect of the question, and that has been allowed to generate heat and passion, but there is another aspect which should tell for peace, and be the greatest lever in the hands of King George for the development of an Anglo-German entente, and that is the fact that the British Empire has a greater trade with the German Empire than with any other country. War would therefore be suicidal. The cost of armaments to-day is strangling both countries. Time is ripe for an entente. May the visit of the King to the Kaiser pave the way for it.

LONDON, To-day.
Welcoming such promising incidents as a new regime of peace, American preparations are now in progress for the celebration. The completion of a hundred years of peace between Britain and the States was a prominent phrase in a resolution moved by the President of the Board of Education, Rt. Hon. Joseph Albert Pease, and adopted in acclamation at the 97th annual meeting of the Peace Society, held in the Mansion House yesterday under the Presidency of the Lord Mayor of London. Pease was the principal speaker. He said the matter was of much congratulation to the country. Within a few months they would be celebrating with nearly 100,000,000 Americans the centenary. Pease referred to the disappearance of strained relations which had existed between Britain and Germany and uttered a warning against what he described as one great danger to-day namely the fact that an enormous number of people were peculiarly interested in the production of armaments, which threatened to become a vested interest and get control of the nation as the liquor trade did a few years back. At the Hague an eloquent plea for help from American women and the women of Germany, Austria and other European nations for campaigns in the interest of universal peace was made by Countess Isabel Aberdeen, wife of the Lord Lieut. of Ireland, President of the World Council of Women, a prominent movement toward universal peace and international arbitration. The big topic was the programme to be arranged for the great quinquennial meeting at Rome, in 1914.

LONDON, To-day.
When the last peace conference assembled here to discuss the Balkan settlement, it was Bulgaria, which indulged in tactics of delay. Now the position is reversed and Bulgaria is anxious to sign the preliminary peace treaty, while the other allies are raising objections. They desire modifications of the treaty as decided upon by the Powers. There is no likelihood that the conference will resemble this week.

Aged Couple Celebrate

Their Sixtieth Wedding Day at Port-au-Cove.

It rarely happens that wedded bliss lasts for fifty golden years, yet Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Harvey, of Port-au-Cove, C.B., celebrated to-day the sixtieth anniversary of their wedding. A few of the old neighbours who were present on that occasion, on May 17th, 1853, when Father O'Connor, then a young priest, tied the nuptial knot, are still alive to offer their good wishes to the venerable jubilarians. Time has dealt kindly with Mr. and Mrs. Harvey. Mr. Harvey is still as active as a young man. He is at present actively engaged erecting a barn, while Mrs. Harvey attends to the household work with all the activity of a young woman. They were blessed with a family of fourteen children, only one of whom, Mr. Patrick Harvey, Jr., now lives with them. We congratulate them on this exceptional event, and hope to see them amongst us for many years to come.

DON'T BE DOWN-HEARTED.

No doubt if you are suffering from Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Catarrh, Nervous Dyspepsia or any other stomach trouble you will certainly have the following symptoms:
