

AutoStrop Razor
—sharpens itself

Only a sharp blade gives a perfect shave

An unstropped blade cannot give as good a shave to-day as it did yesterday and must soon be discarded.

The exclusive self-stropping feature of the AutoStrop Razor ensures from each blade as perfect a shave each day as the day before. It is as easy to clean as to stop—nothing to unscrew or take apart.

Any dealer will demonstrate the AutoStrop Razor to you, guarantee satisfaction or refund of purchase price.

Only $5.00—complete with stop—twelve blades in an attractive assortment of cases to suit any purpose.

Lived on Fifteen Cents a Day.

One of the strangest tragedies of the high cost of living has made a comparatively poor woman the heiress to hundreds of thousands of dollars.

For thirty years Andrew J. Seaman, of Omaha, Neb., lived on 15 cents a day. That was his expense budget. When prices got so high that 15 cents a day would not keep a man alive, Seaman died—though the direct cause of his death was declared by physicians to have been an infected hand which he would not have treated by a doctor because "it would cost too much." Literally, Seaman felt that he could not afford to live.

Seaman's sister, Mrs. Harriet Wolfe, of Los Angeles, Cal., who earned her living as a seamstress, accompanied by her son and her daughter, is now in Omaha and has taken charge of the estate left by her brother. Mrs. Wolfe has filed a claim for the entire estate as Seaman's only living relative, save her own children. While the bulk of the old man's estate is supposed to be in safe deposit boxes, the keys to which have not been found, the administrator, already has found about $100,000 in cash and believes the estate will run above half a million dollars. Many people who had dealings with Seaman predict the total will be nearer one million dollars.

The administrator discovered deposits in every building and loan association in Omaha and in a dozen different banks. One deposit has been located in a country town bank 150 miles from Omaha, and it is believed Seaman had deposits in other country banks. After a search for the keys to his safety deposit vault proved futile, the manufacturers of the vault were telegraphed for duplicate keys. Not till they arrive can even an approximate estimate of the total amount of the fortune be made.

Sole Object Was Making Money.

For thirty years Seaman had strained every nerve toward making money yet had denied himself every pleasure money could buy. He wore old clothes, lived out of town to escape city taxes and so far out, in such a humble neighborhood, that his room cost him only 50 cents a month. He is said to have walked to and from the city rather than pay car fare. For light he used a candle, for water went to the well and for warmth stayed in bed till it was time to go to town.

Before moving to Omaha Seaman lived in Council Bluffs, Ia., which is just across the Missouri River from the Nebraska city. It is related that once he was engaged to a girl in Council Bluffs, but they drifted apart when he moved to Omaha. It cost 5 cents toll to cross the bridge, and he could not bring himself to pay it.

Not only would Seaman walk ten miles a day to save car fare, but he even walked longer distances to save railroad fare. Some years ago, according to people who knew him in Omaha, it was necessary for him to go to Denver on business. The fare at that time was $17.50 each way, the distance six hundred miles. Seaman walked both ways and saved $35. It is told of him that he carried extra half-soles with him and borrowed a hammer and tacks at houses he passed, to repair his shoes on that trip.

According to the stories from Omaha, Seaman cut his own hair, did his own laundry, and had not shaved for thirty years. He maintained that 15 cents a day was enough for any man to spend for meals. For that, he said, he could get a bowl of bread and milk three times a day, or a bowl of soup with a slice or two of bread thrown in. When he could no longer find a restaurant which would serve him so cheaply he bargained with one for two meals a day for 15 cents. That is, he called them meals.

Same Clothes For All Seasons.

He wore the same clothes winter and summer, buying them from second hand stores. He wore a long Prince Albert coat which covered a multitude of patches. One of the many stories about the eccentric old man is that a friend expostulated with him about that coat.

"It's a disgrace to your father," the friend asserted.

"On the contrary," replied the old man, "it is the coat my father wore. He had it when he married, and wore it afterwards till I was big enough to wear it."

Seaman made most of the money he saved so carefully and uselessly by buying tax titles at public sheriff's sales.

Even when he knew he was about to die and leave his hoardings, Seaman shrank from the thought of expense. His ruling passion was strong in death. Shortly before he died he is reported to have said:

"Don't buy a coffin for me—a box is good enough."

Mouse v. Snake.

The case of "Gus," the Zoo's little squirrel monkey, who bullies the giant fighting guinea pig, whose cage he shares, is beaten by the extraordinary companionship of a snake and a mouse, vouched for by Mr. E. G. Boulenger, curator of reptiles at the Zoological Gardens.

Mr. Boulenger once kept a tame four-foot South African snake in his own house, and one autumn he placed a mouse in the cage as a final meal before the reptile's winter fast and sleep.

The snake had no appetite, however, and the mouse settled down without any signs of terror. After a day or two Mr. Boulenger was astonished to find the mouse actually sitting in the coils of the snake. When the mouse found his bed not quite comfortable he nipped the reptile and forced it to readjust its coils into a more cozy nest.

They lived like this for some weeks, till its hibernating instinct (or the tyranny of the mouse) drove the snake to burrowing under the turf floor of the cage. The mouse watched the tunnelling operation, and when the snake had quite vanished into the
