

Forest Fire Out.RAIN EXTINGUISHES BLAZE.

The first forest fire for the season was reported yesterday to be raging near Botwood at the point where the R.N. Co.'s and A.N.D. Co.'s tracks cross. The latest reports state that the fire, helped by the rain which fell last night, has burned itself out without doing any great damage. The fire is supposed to have started near a fox farm.

Our Local PeppaHIS DIARY.

June 1st.—It comes to my mind that I have not written in my journal these many days, and the reason of it I can not tell, but is that I am lazy, if my wife speaks aright. Up betimes and to the office wearing my flannel clothes and very warm in them, being that the season has grown to a great heat. A new trouble made to us, it seems by the Irish, they making another compact and none know what will come of it. I did hear how I did gain naught from my tickets on the Depby, which did grieve me mightily and my wife even more, seeing how she must now do without her new coat for the summer. Mr. Coaker, that is Minister of Marine and Fisheries, is home, and he away these three months. He tells how he did sell the pulp wood of the Government, but Povy tells me how this was all sold and before Mr. Coaker knew of it. I meet the brother of Secretary Carew, and he gives me the news of Bell Island. The Parliament meets in the afternoon and I there, but a most strange thing is that the Speaker is late, and the Government adjourns the sitting. But no sooner is the House adjourned, then in comes Mr. Speaker, and he in all his robes. I hear news of how there may be an election in the autumn, but doubt if it will come to pass. Many make enquiry of my journal, and why I have not printed it this evening, and this, I think, very kind of them.

Bottomley Sentenced.

FORMER EDITOR GETS SEVEN YEARS—A BRILLIANT WRITER AND SPEAKER.

A special cable despatch from London states that, on Monday, May 28th, Horatio Bottomley, former publisher and editor of "John Bull" was found guilty by a jury on the charge of misappropriation of funds belonging to the Victory Bond Club. He was sent to prison for seven years penal servitude. This ends the public career of one of the cleverest men of the present century. Horatio Bottomley was born in 1860, the eldest son of William King Bottomley. He was educated at Mason's College, Birmingham and afterwards, was for many years connected with large financial undertakings in London. At the age of 20 he married Elsie Norton. He acted as the pioneer of Western Australian Mining, founded the Financial Times, subsequently became proprietor of The Sun newspaper and afterwards established "John Bull" of which he was editor for many years. He was a warm friend of Chas. Bradlaugh, the great atheist. Throughout his career Bottomley figured in frequent law suits. He was the principal defendant in the case of Regina vs. Bottomley and Others in 1893 and in the Rex vs. Bottomley and Others in 1909. In both these cases he successfully conducted his own defence and is generally regarded as the best "lay lawyer" in England. He was the author and chief advocate of the Business Government idea. In 1887, he unsuccessfully contested the Hornsey Division of Middlesex, and South Hackney failed to return him in 1900. He was elected for South Hackney in 1906 and sat in Parliament until 1912. He again contested this London district in 1915 as an Independent and is still its member of Parliament. Bottomley was keenly interested in sport and was the owner of several race horses. During the war he exposed several scandals in his paper "John Bull," which enjoyed an enormous circulation. He was a bitter opponent of all things German and had no love for the Americans. He supported Lloyd George un-

the astute Welshman quarrelled with Lord Northcliffe, when Bottomley supported the latter. His downfall was brought about by the Victory Bond Club which he started in connection with "John Bull." He sold the bonds to the public at £1 per share and investors, who could not get their money returned, brought actions against him. In the libel action brought early this year by Bottomley against Reuben Bigland, several matters affecting the Victory Bond Club were brought to light. Bottomley was put on trial and on Monday last a case on which the interest of millions was centred, came to an end. A brilliant, fiery writer, Bottomley in the various Sunday papers was eagerly looked for and his speeches in Parliament were frequently repeated in the press and in the public mind. His imprisonment was a great loss to the country and his spirit of story ready pen.
