The Braes of Yarrow An Historical Tale of the Sixteenth Century.

He informed him of the contents of the epistle he had received and the sawer written. 'She advised you tite a semable woman, and you have acted like a feel,' commenced the Captain. 'And new I will see you from the castle, for your way may he barred if I be not by to take the hame of your tarrying beyond the hour. You have tied another stone to your neck with that letter, and if you do not sink with the weight I shall cry marvel.'

In bidding him farewell at the outer gate, Gilbert pressed his hand fondly as if it had been that of a dear parent, and hurriedae cross the drawbridge. Had he delayed two minutes longer, the event Lindsay had feared would have taken place; for before he had got half way down the hill, the warder received intimation to detain him prisoner if he were not already beyond the walls of the castle.

The page who bore Master Elliot's enistle

The page who bore Master Elliot's epistle for his mistress Lady Douglas had crossed the Court, ascended the broad staircase, and with his dainty mincing gait was passing along the corridor to her ladyship's apartments, when he was stopped by a tap on the shoulder from some one behind.

He wheeled round and met the dark eyes of Heron Barras. The page bowed with a mock air of deep respect, for he had learned that this gentleman was no favourite with his mistress.

Is mistress.

Follow me,' said Barras authoritively.

Under favour, my lord, I am bound to atnd my mistress, who awaits me.'

Barras frowned.

Under favour or not jackanapes, you shall llow me.'

*Under favour or not jackanapes, you man's follow me,'

*I am not bound to follow any man's beck, and will not yours.'

The youth turned as if to pursue his way.

Barras angrily gripped him by the arm.

'Hark you, sirrah, his lordship of Angus commands you to attend me to his presence. Disobey, and—there are durgeon beneath the tower into which living men have entered and never came forth alive again.'

This was said in an ominous whisper, the youth trembled, hesistated, and then meekly followed.

Barras led him through a number of corridors, and at length halted before a door, which he threw open.

Again the page hesitated, and regarded the man with a suspicious glance. But as if mes-merised by the dark power of the man's eyes he obeyed.

'My lord, Augus is not here,' he cried, ne obeyed.

'My lord, Angus is not here,' he cried, starting back.

But Barraa had closed and secured the door. Then he zripped the affrighted youth by the throat, and held his poignard poised as if to strike.

'Breathe one ward

Beatte one word above your breath and it is your last. Be silent, obedient, and discreet, and you shall have ten gold pieces as a present guerdon of the favour of my Lord Angus.'
'What—what—would you have?' stammer what—what—would you have? stammered the page.

'Show me the letter you got but now from Master Elliot,'
'I—I have none,
'That is a pity, for it would have saved
your lies.'

The poignard was descending—

The poignard was descending—

Stay, stay, master, and I will do anything you wish.

With trembling fingers, he produced the letter, Barras slipped his poignard under the seal, opened it and read it.

He lit a taper and re-sealed the letter, smiling coldly.

He lit a taper and re-scaled the letter, smiling coldly.

'There are the ten gold pieces I promised you. Take this to your mistress, it is not what I expected to find. But mark, do you but hint that you encountered me in your passage, and no power on earth shall save you from me. Go, and remember.'

He opened the door, and the trembling page hurried away.

TO BE CONTINUED.

THE INDIAN TITLE.—Lord Ebury, Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton, and a number of other Christian philanthropists, have addressed a memorial to Mr. Disraeli concerning the Indian tribes of the Northwest Territory. They say that the Hudson Bay Company has systematically ignored the title of the Indians to the land, and claimed the property thereof to themselves.—a claim which so long as it was not followed by occupation, was little understood by the Indians, though sometimes protested against; but now that their claim is to be transferred to Canada,—a transference which is to be followed up by settlement,—it is absolutely necessary, in the interests of justice and humanity, that ample provision be made for the peaceful extinction of the native title on equitable principles, and for the settlement and civilization of the numerous though decaying tribes of Rupert's Land.
