I think it was no later than the third night after Sephen had spoken to my uncle that I frankly told him that I thought I ought not to marry him. He asked me why, and I said: "All my lite long, Stephen, I have been a crushed, unlike the separation of the separatio wisely?' Then we had a long conversation, which it is not necessary for me to repea; it will times we were left alone together, and sometimes we went out for a walk. Nor-ments, such lingerie, such hosiery, such morning dresses and evening costumes, such wonderful hoots and slippers and jawelry. We held little receptions every afternoon a month before the wedding, and my wardrobe was laid out in the best bed-my wardrobe was laid out in the best bedroom for comment and inspection.

It was about this time that Stephen Birker said to my uncle: "I understand Frances has $25,000. I wish her to have it so settled on herself, and for her own absolute use, that I propose, Mr. Miles, if you are willing, to add $10,000 to it and buy for her the Stamford estate. It is only three miles from here, the house is a very fine one, the land excellent, and then, whatever changes come, it secures her a comp tency, for as soon as the railway is finished it will be worth double. What do you say?"

who was a teacher in one of the public schools of New York, came to spend her vacation with us, and Stephen fell in love with her in a way that confinced me that his love for Frances Hilliday had only been the shadow of the love he had for her mother. Why, Norman himself never be mother. Why, Norman himself never be stephen about this little plain Ruth Strong; for she is plain—every one must allow that.

And the preparations that are going on for the marriago quite amuse me, who might have been the banker's wife myself. Dear me, I think love must laugh at the been applied to her own use always. Will you look at the accounts?"

"Your word is sufficient, Mr. Miles."
So in about two weeks the transfer was safely and amicably effected, and Stamford Hall and estate were surely and firmly made over to Frances' Halliday, spinster, for her and her heirs forever. I must state here that I opposed as strongly as I thought right Stephen's gift of $10,000, and his subsequent outlay of $1000 on furniture; but both uncle and auct said the set lement was small enough for a man of his economic application. The tis all I have to say about my marriage. I think it was rather peculiar. Some women will doubtless say they don't believe such men as Stephen exist. But let a girl, when she discovers she does not like a man, tell him so, and ask his advice and help, and she will find another Stephen. How can men be chivalrous and self denying if women don't give them of portunities? I think that is wrong, and I intend to give Norman every chance to cultivate such noble qualities.

First, there was the Samford estate from my father and Stephen Barker, and the my father and Stephen Barker, and the settled bills for $1000 worth of new furniture which Stephen had sent to make the old rooms pretty and comfortable. Uncle gave me a set of silver, and aunt some fine china, both of which gitts I took care to send to Stamford before my wedding day. My cousing and aunts and friends gave me all sorts of jawelry and pretty personal knecks necks, and these I carefully packed in the half-dozen tranks which were already. is the half-dozen trunks which were arready control and deepted two days before the market that it is sometimes difficult to the market that it is sometimes difficult to tell which to buy; but if we had a cough, a cold or any affliction of the throat or trunks to our New York hotel two days

"And you love Norman?" he asked the stephene at nightfall with a possible.

"And you love Norman?" he asked the strong as possible.

But at Stamford hall everything had been prepared for my comfort. The fires were blazing, the gas lighted, and an exme, but uncle said we were neither of us to be trusted with my $25,000."

"S you have $25,000?"

"Papa left me that much; but Uncle Miles can keep it until I am 35, unless I marry to please him, or unless he is so satisfied of my good sense that he volun.

That was the way the men took it, and Norman pretended to be satisfied. The women acted with a great deal more intelligence. They all came to see me, and though I did not give them all credit for the very kindest of motives I made them the very kindest of motives I made them about my wedding trip, and showed them about my wedding trip, and showed them my new things, and I dare say the meu talked everything over with them afterward.

But what most puzzled everybody was that beings, and he made me presents of pretty jeweiry. He spent the evenings at Uncle Miles house, and some thought it very mean spirited in him, and others remembered that when he was very young he had loved my motive from his house, and some thought it very mean spirited in him, and others remembered that when he was very young he had loved my motive from the form of the purple to mop up the perspiration.

This showed in Jose a very forgiving spirit, seeing that he had looked on me and my $25 000 with affection, and I had not appreciated the honor. However, he forgave me at this interesting epoch, and came benignly to bless my venture. He brought me as a present a black only a seal ring, on which we set a cross in seed-pearis. He had offered me it once briore, with his affections and his manse, and I had then refused it. I took it this time.

It helped to swell the list of my presents, and they certainly made a goodly show. First, there was the Samford estate from my father and, Scephen Barker, and the
