WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 1ST 1902.

Mr. Foss, the Boston Republican candidate for congressional honors, who advocates tariff reforms and reciprocity with Canada, has evidently outlined a policy very much in accord with the popular feeling in his constituency. He is now a victor over Colonel M. Adams, who was considered to be the strongest aspirant for the candidature and who held the "machine" endorsement. Mr. Foss' nomination for Congress will be equivalent to his election, and the presence of such a representative free lance in the administration will surely disturb the equilibrium of protectionism. Already there is manifest alarm among the members of his own party at the enthusiasm with which his suggested reforms have been received, and Senator Henry Cabot Lodge has undertaken to still the storm by explaining that reciprocity with Canada is a practical impossibility, and the responsibility for this condition rests entirely with Canada. This is news for the Canadian people as well as for the constituents whom Senator Lodge seeks to enlighten. For many years we have understood that it was the Dominion government that sent the representatives "hat in hand" and on "hendi knees" to Washington to plead for free trade relations, but Senator Lodge will have it that "the time has been reached when the United States can no longer go "hat in hand to Canada and ask to settle those questions," a pretty plain intimation that he considers his government has already taken the initiative too long. It may be that the people of neither country have been correctly informed in regard to these negotiations. According to Senator Lodge, the Alaskan boundary is the biggest that effectually blocks any reciprocity with Canada, and he is emphatic in his declaration that no administration would ever dare yield an inch of American territory to England, and with this boundary question in abeyance all talk of reciprocity is worthless. Once again there is a misunderstanding of conditions. In Canada we have been taught to believe that the United States figured in the land-grabbing scheme in the gold fields of the Klondike, and that the Alaskan boundary had proved elastic enough to be stretched far into Canadian territory, but Senator Lodge is a reputable man, a tower of strength to his government and he insists that it is Canada that is trying to embrace American territory. Of course there is a right and a wrong party to this dispute, and it would be well that the fullest information on the subject be made public. Senator Lodge says:

"When we bought Alaska in 1867 we inherited the title of Russia, and we bought it. Russia had made a treaty settling the boundary with England in 1825."

"For 70 years we had held that boundary, that title, utterly undisputed. The discovery of gold in the Klondike led to a claim by England and by Canada, to part of our undisputed territory against the boundary line which they had placed on their own maps in the past."

"There never was a more purely manufactured claim in the world. It was a claim that, no respecting nation could admit. We did make an offer at the time I am speaking of, the winter of 1898-99, for the settlement of that question."

"We offered, our commissioners were ready to go much farther than yielding than any administration will ever go again."

"They rejected the offer. It is like the Sabine boys—they will never get the chance again."

"Now let me say that it is a question which involves the territory of the United States. The United States cannot go into an arbitration which no arbitration is possible if one side cannot possibly gain and may lose, and the other side cannot possibly lose and may gain."

"We have a claim there—we have a possession and a title there as good as good as we have to the State of Maine, and if we should undertake to yield, if we should for a moment think of yielding on that question, there is not a particle of the boundary of the United States that would not be open to some claim on our neighbors across the border. That is what the condition of the relations with Canada is today."

Here is the American contention, without an attempted delineation of boundaries. We have understood that the Russo-English treaty described a territory extending a specified distance from the shore inland, and that the treaty left legitimate grounds for argument as to whether the country was measurable in breadth from its head lands or from the deepest indentations of its coast line. If there is no room for argument, Canada would do well to cease pressing a claim that is the principal one, while in the past to a fairer trade treaty with the United States. But we are afraid there is ground for argument, and the self-respect of nations is such a sensitive feeling that a claim once made is always adhered to and the admission of an error is forbidden. The arbitration of this boundary question seems to stand in its long adjustment by the consent of all parties concerned, a general admission of the apparent hopelessness of an amicable settlement.

RIGHT-OF-WAY DAMAGES.

The awards to land owners within the town limits for right-of-way privileges granted to the M. & V. B. Ry. Co., have nearly all been settled either by mutual agreement or by arbitration. The awards are as follows: J. R. DeWitt, $640; S. Pratt, $575; M. Jefferson, $235; John Ervin, $150; Abram Young, $250; W. C. McLaughlin, $200; Jarvis Chase, $700; W. Dodge, $100.

Settled by arbitration—John B. Eakin (award $50); S. S. Burgess, $705; W. B. Calder, $610; Mrs. Elizabeth Parker, $1800; Jas. Jodrey, $1215; W. Aard Marshall, $220. In these cases Mr. F. R. Ray acted for the town. Hon. W. H. Ray for John H. Hicks, Mrs. Parker and W. A. Marshall. W. C. Henly for S. S. Burgess, David Freeman for W. B. Calder, and Earl Freeman for Jas. Jodrey. In three cases Mr. Henry Muro of King-ston acted as third broker, while R. J. Messenger served in that capacity in the other three cases.

The only damages remaining to be appraised are in the cases of the lands owned by Miss Mary Jelfery and the Trusting Park Company. The awards are generally considered in most cases unnecessarily high.
