Thousands Viewed the Body of Dead Monarch

The ninth carriage was occupied by Lord Strathcona, lord high commissioner for Canada, Sir George Reid and William Paul Jones.

The two carriages following carried persons in waiting.

Arriving at Paddington station the casket was placed in the funeral car, which carried the funeral party to Windsor. The royal saloon was upholstered in purple and white silk and a catafalque erected in the centre supported the casket. The car was occupied by King George, Queen Mary, the Queen Mother Alexandra, eight other sovereigns and near relatives.

Special teams followed with the high officials, foreign representatives and special envoys.

It was a bitter winter day when the body of Queen Victoria was borne up the hill to the medieval chapel of St. George's. To day the castle gates at Windsor opened to receive the casket of the Seventh Edward, with the green of an English spring on the trees and within the massive walls. The grey towers and battlements over which the Union Jack was flying at half-mast never appeared more impressive.

A SEETHING MASS IN WINDSOR STREETS.

In the streets below was a seething mass of people in black with a line kept open by two solid lines of soldiers for the cortege to pass through.

When the royal train arrived at the station the body of the monarch was again placed on a gun carriage and the procession was re-formed with the addition of the ambassadors, ministers and other representatives of foreign states. Thus it passed through the purple draped streets to the castle and into St. George's chapel.

The clergy who were to conduct the service were in chapel when the cortege arrived. They were Archbishop of Canterbury, Archbishop of York and the Bishops of Winchester and Oxford and the Dean of Windsor, the three latter respectively the prelate chancellor and registrar of the garter.

THE CASKET BURIED IN FLOWERS.

The casket was placed on a purple catafalque before the altar, which was fairly buried in flowers, as the minute guns boomed and bells tolled the casket borne on the shoulders of the Grenadier guards was placed on the catafalque. King George as the chief mourner stood at the head of the casket. His majesty's body guard of gentlemen of arms stood at the left of the bier with axes traversed. The funeral party filled the edifice and overflowed into the prince consort's chapel to the south. There was a moment of profound silence when positions had been taken, and then the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of Winchester advanced to the casket. The choir chanted "Man is born of woman," and the congregation recited the Lord's prayer, the low rumble of many voices being accompanied with Gounod's music. The service of the Church of England was followed throughout.

THE PRAYER OF THE GARTER KING.

Following the Lord's prayer, the anthem, "How Blest are They," was sung, after which the garter king advanced to the altar and spoke as follows: "For as much as it has pleased Almighty God to take out of this life unto his divine mercy the late most high, most mighty and most excellent monarch Edward by the grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, king, defender of the faith, Emperor of India, and sovereign of the most noble Order of the Garter, let us humbly beseech Almighty God to bless with long life, health and honor and all worldly happiness the most high, most mighty and most excellent monarch, our sovereign Lord George, now by the grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great, Britain and Ireland, king, defender of the faith, Emperor of India, and sovereign of the most noble order of the garter. God save the king."

THE ANSWERING MURMUR FROM THE ASSEMBLAGE

An answering murmur of "God save the King" arose from the assemblage.

The Archbishop of Canterbury pronounced the solemn benediction after which, with the Bishop of Winchester, he knelt before the altar in a moment of silent prayer. As the clergy rose to their feet, the hush was broken and the procession withdrew from the chapel in order of its entrance. The body of Edward VII. remained before the altar, later to find a permanent resting place in the royal tomb house in Albert Memorial chapel.

CASKET LOWERED INTO THE CRYPT.

Windsor, May 20.—During the service at St. George's chapel the widowed queen moved to the foot of the casket and knelt. At the conclusion of the service the casket was lowered to the crypt. Before this was done King George placed a royal standard on the coffin.

Opportunities for Young Men in Nova Scotia

To the Editor of the Halifax Herald: Sir,—I noticed in your paper of recent date some young man asking what could be done to induce him and some others to remain in your city and not come west. The answer I would give, they are the ones to do something to induce others to stay.

I lived in Nova Scotia for thirty years and know lots of opportunities for young men with small capital to start in different lines of business, such as fruit growing, mixed farming stock raising or manufacturing. I visited my old home last summer not far from your city and was surprised when one of the meat merchants told me he had driven eighty miles that day and could not find a beef fit to put on the market.

Look at the price of country produce today compared with twenty years ago, and you can't begin to supply the demand.

This, of course, is a large country, and a man who feels like roughing it for a few years, not only will succeed as a farmer. In the cities and towns the business men are simply working for their landlords, rents and other expenses are so extraordinarily high: so when you consider your expenses compared with the rest, the enjoyments of life and the morality of the two countries, I stay at home and enjoy life and help to build up one of the best provinces in this great Dominion of ours.

THE REVOLVER EVIL.

(From the Montreal Star.)

Since we do not allow the sale of poisons without a physician's order, we ought, at once, to see that no dealer disposes of a revolver without written instructions from the Chief of Police, or a Stipendiary Magistrate. If the regulations governing the first of these commodities is desirable, the second, is many times more so. We ought to prevent dealers playing up on the ignorance of immigrants by tempting them to purchase fire-arms and the best way to accomplish this will be by forbidding the promiscuous inclusion of revolvers in window-displays. We ought to punish severely any of that all-too-numerous class of bright young men who carry "a gun" habitually and display it occasionally. Until something is done in this direction, we have no right to expect any falling off in the absolutely needless accidents and fatalities for which revolvers are responsible.

"It cured me," or "it saved the life of my child," are the expressions you hear every day about Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. No other medicine in use for diarrhoea or bowel complaints has received such general approval. The secret of the success of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy is that it cures. Sold by all dealers.

THEODORE FIRST.

(From the Toronto Telegram.)

Theodore Roosevelt, with all his failings and imperfections, was the biggest, noblest figure among all the non-British mourners who followed the funeral train of Edward VII. The manhood of Roosevelt was not dwarfed by comparison with the might of kings and emperors, who have simply inherited thrones anterior in grandeur to the sovereignty over 90,000,000, the sovereignty with Theodore Roosevelt achieved and then renounced.

LIFE STORY LIKE A NOVEL.

Convicted Man Tells of Historic Battles and Gallant Rescues.

Like a novel in epitome was a written statement handed in to a London magistrate recently by a man, against whom were three separate charges of stealing boots.

The writer of the autobiography was Beger, alias Patrick Hayes, aged thirty-three years, of Blomfield road, Bow. The boots stolen were the property of various boot dealers in the East End of London.

Hayes at once pleaded guilty to all three charges, in order, he said, "to save the time of the court." His written statement, as read by the magistrate, was as follows:

"I am an ex-P.C. of the Royal Irish Constabulary, and resigned from that force to take part in the Jameson Raid. I was sent back from Cape Colony with others when the leaders were captured. On returning to London I joined the Scots Guards, and went through the Boer war, receiving the Queen's and King's medals and clasps for 'Diamond Hill,' 'Belfast,' 'Johannesburg,' 'Modder River,' 'Paardeberg,' and 'Doornkop.'"

The document went on to tell how Hayes was promoted corporal on the field of "Belfast."

"For courageous conduct in the firing line, and later, at Jericho, in the Eastern Transvaal, was the means of saving twenty of my comrades, who would have been either killed or captured. For this I received the thanks and commendation of the general and officers of the column. I was invalided from South Africa for heart disease and debility, occasioned by the heavy marching and privations of the campaign, and subsequently transferred to the Reserves."

Then came the tragedy of the story, in which the writer said he could get no work by reason of his invalidity, and must now lose all hope of pension.

"In 1907 I was taken off the Reserves, and granted fifteenpence a day for twelve months. That ceased in July, 1909. The question of the renewal of the pension is under the consideration of the War Office authorities now, and is getting support from the general officer that commanded my division, but this disgrace will speedily terminate any good that may accrue.

"I found that being invalided for heart disease was the greatest barrier against my getting employment in the police, postoffice, or any railway company, and on that account my work has been temporary and casual, and is the means of my standing before you now."

Hayes, it was said, had already been bound over under the Probation Act, both at the Sessions and in the City, and the court missionary, and the officers about the court, had helped him.

He was sentenced to three months in the second division on account of his theft.

Artistic Enthusiasm.

An amusing letter of apology, in broken English, was left in the Roman villa at Brading, near Sandown, Isle of Wight, a place of great interest to antiquaries, when it was broken in on Easter Sunday. The offence was apparently committed by a visitor from Holland, as explained in the following note:—

"I wanted to see and appreciate that famous Roman art. I was so unfortunate to come here from Holland on Sunday. You refused me to enter on account of it being Sunday. I did everything I could to convince you in vain.

"Nothing was left to me than to see it in a manner which is not the regular one. I climbed on the roof, but could not see through the windows. So then I broke the window. I give the sixpence (price of admission) to a poor of the isle.—Excuse me."

The authorities are searching for the offender and also for the person who received the sixpence.

Modern Heartlessness.

It has remained for England, through the operation of her old age pension law, to afford the world perhaps the most striking example of the heartlessness of the present age. This law provides that those entitled to its benefit cannot receive the aid offered so long as they are inmates of almshouses. In the search for homes which is being carried forward by the unfortunate, would-be receivers of old age pensions there has come a sad revelation of the supposed strength of family feeling. Out of 523 old men and women entitled to leave a certain workhouse on old age pensions only 37 were sure that they would be welcomed by relatives. As a matter of fact, it was eventually found that only nine of this number really had homes to which they could go.

"A Mischievous Imp."

Some interesting recollections of Sir Rufus Isaacs, the new Solicitor-General, are given in The Jewish World by one who was at school with him. He was, it seems, the very worst of boys from the schoolmaster's point of view. "Lessons he left unlearned, clean-work he shirked, and mischief was his only devotion. Nor was he mischievous only in himself—he delighted in mischievous others in his 'washed ways.' Indeed, my recollection of the Solicitor-General is always associated with a demoniacal young mischievous imp, with sparkling eyes, who was always in disgrace or being cased, and yet who was ever merry and deliciously humorous."

Heir Is Missing.

A romantic story underlies the will of the late Ald. Dr. Barratt, of Birmingham. The doctor provided for his son Alfred to receive the income from $40,000, but there is a proviso in the will that at the end of a period of two years if the beneficiary does not appear his death shall be presumed and the money shall revert to the estate. It is half a century since Alfred Barratt was last seen in Birmingham. He was fond of sport and spent many years roaming about the world, but there is no information that he ever returned to his native land.
