

Dallas, with an air of disgust, grips his paddle again ; and Françoise is half glad of the respite for to-night—until she catches sight of his face.

Then she leans forward slightly, as she trails her hand in the water :

“Have I not, Dallas ?” she says.

THE END.