

are spoken addresses and all the more forcible on that account. They are imbued with his strong and urgent personality. The book takes a wide sweep, from a fresh and strong setting forth of the great underlying principles on which the mission cause rests, to familiar instances from the author's own observation on foreign fields of missionary methods and missionary heroism. The chief object in view is to vindicate missions by their results. And this is done conclusively and so done that the mouth of the reader is filled with arguments against all comers. Such titles as The Kind of Men Needed in Foreign Missions, Missions and Spiritual Life, The Scuttle Policy in China, Glimpses of Life on a Persian Highway, Missionary Heroism I Have Known, The Resources of the Christian Church—may give some notion of what awaits the reader.

The season for buying gift books is close at hand. A charming Christmas present would be this collection of tales from the best English writers. These pages furnish solid instruction as well as real pleasure; for the events which they describe are either real events in British history, or else illustrate the character of the period from which they are derived. No one will call history dry if studied as presented here. The Morang Company have given us a Canadian edition of the book, which stands first in a series

Modern Missions in the East. By Edward A. Lawrence, D.D. Fleming H. Revell Company, Toronto; 340 pages, $1.50.

A new edition of a book on missionary methods, which may still be read with profit by those who wish to make themselves acquainted with the science of missions. It is a scientific treatment of missions that we find here. The author, during a tour of twenty months amongst the chief mission fields, collected the facts from which he has derived the principles underlying the great mission enterprise of the church. Candidates for appointment to foreign work will learn from this book much that will be helpful to them in their prospective life work, while the friends of missions who remain at home, will gain, through the reading of it, a more accurate knowledge of the precise nature of mission work in heathen lands.

OPINIONS FROM THE CRITICS.

TALKS WITH YOUNG MEN.

Rev. Mr. SPURGEON said: "The author gives young men fine advice—full of grace and thought—enlivened by story and proverb, fresh with sympathy, and on fire with zeal. These short talks are just what they should be, and all that they further need is to be largely distributed among the crowds of our advancing manhood. To begin to read is to be bound to continue; the talks are so sensible that no one wishes to silence the talker by laying aside the book."

FOREWARNED—FOREARMED.

Independent: "A book of pointed, pithy talks, in the best spirit and most effective style. They are bright and sweet, wise and gentle, and at the same time deeply serious. A better or more promising book for young men in these tempted and trying times we do not expect to see."

A GOOD START.

Presbyterian Observer: "Full of common sense, sensible advice, earnest warnings, loving appeals. It is the aim of these discourses to lay hold of young men before they are caught in the fatal whirlpool, to warn them of the pitfalls, to point them to Christ as alone able to conduct them safely amid all the perils that surround them."

SURE TO SUCCEED.

Christian Herald: "A book full of sound advice to young men, showing that the most successful life in the world without Christ is only failure."

THE CITY YOUTH.

Methodist Review: "A subject at once of the highest importance and requiring the greatest delicacy of handling, ably and successfully treated. Let young men, everywhere, read it."
