

Dedication of the Walter C. Mackenzie Health Sciences Centre, of the University of Alberta Hospitals Complex in Edmonton, in October 1982. The Centre, designed by Toronto architect Eberhard Zeidler, has three parallel wings grouped around a glass-domed courtyard with benches, window boxes, trees and a waterfall. Six-foot spaces between each floor contain heating and electrical equipment so that the building can be renovated with minimal disruption to hospital activities. The Centre was funded through the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund, established with revenue from the province's natural resources.
