A Serious Matter.

The board of control, for the first time, yesterday realized just how serious a matter it was for council to approve of sending on concrete plans for the Bloor street viaduct to the Ontario Railway Board. Commissioner Harris reported that it meant weeks and weeks and months of delay in getting the work started. The commissioner unhesitatingly stated that he was in favor of steel construction, to which the mayor replied that council was certain to approve of steel also. The board will now see if there is not some way in which the recommendation for examination of the cencrete plans cannot be withdrawn.

After pointing out specific instances in which the city's accounting system fell down the controller touched on the proposal of appointing a finance commissioner, which question will be debated by council on Monday next. The commissioner, he said, would give expert advice, and relieve an already overburdened city treasurer.
