It is in the direction of increased facilities for acquiring information concerning companies that a step towards uniformity would be commercially most useful, a step, moreover, which could be taken without causing any disturbance to trade. The same information as to the affairs of a company might be easily made accessible whether the com pany was registered in the United Kingdom or elsewhere within the empire. If a larger step should ever appear to be feasible, it can hardly doubted that the assimilation of the law of companies thruout the empire would be a great convenience to the mercantile community generally. It would, moreover, tend to increase the confidence of the home investor in companies registered in India and in the colonies, and the result might well be a greater willingness on the part of capital from home to flow into Indian and colonial undertakings and enterprises.
