FOGG'S GREAT SCHEME.

Getting Everything for Nothing Was Right But for One Thing. "It was a great scheme," said Fogg, with unwonted animation, "a great scheme, and but for one thing it would have worked to a charm. "Reading an advertisement of a "Reading an advertisement of a grocer who gave away a teapot with every pound of tea, I said to Mrs. F.: 'Hannah, here's a chance to get a new teapot for nothing.' 'Where'?' said she. 'Just listen to this.' said I. Then I read the advertisement to her: that was all that was necessary. 'Twasn't ten minutes before she had her things on and was off.

"When she came back : hour or so "When she came back: hour or so later her face was all aglow with conscious pride. 'What do you think of them?' said she. 'What in thunder did you buy two pounds of tea for?' said I; 'we'll never use it up.' 'I didn't buy two pounds,' said she. 'Then where did you get two teapots?' said I. 'I bought this one,' said she. 'What for?' said I. 'They gray you one with the bought this one, 'said she. 'What for' said I. 'They gave you one with the pound of tea.' 'Yes,' said she, 'but on the other side of the street there is a crockery store where they give a pound of tea with every teapot that is bought there. I wasn't going to lose the chance to get a pound of tea for nothing, so I hereby a teapot.'

bought a teapot.'

"I never was so proud of Hannah in all my life, though I didn't let on, you know. But'she had given me an idea, and I made up my mind to work it for what it was worth; for I saw that, if properly followed up, it meant that I could get all my supplies for nothing. Here was my wife who had already got ght a teapot.' a gratuitous teapot and an eleemosy-nary pound of tea, and she was only a woman. What couldn't a man accom-plish in the same line?

plish in the same line?

"So I sauntered out on an exploring expedition. It wasn't long before I found one cigar store where they gave a quarter-pound of tobacco with every pipe sold, and another where they gave with every package of tobacco disposed of a brier wood pipe.

"So, to begin with, I had both pipe and tobacco, free gratis for nothing. Then I got an umbrella thrown in with a pair of rubbers, and a pair of rubbers as langniappe for an umbrella; a bottle of hair oil with a hair-cut, and a hair-cut with a bottle of hair oil; a porous plaster with a pound of candy, and a pound of candy with a porous plaster; and so on.

"I found that I could get anything I desired, without money and without price; all that was necessary was to purchase something else. It was a great scheme, as I said in the beginning. found myself in possession of a good many things I didn't want, but that's nany things I thank t want, but that's nothing. Everybody has things he has no use for, The scheme was a good one and it worked well—or it would have worked well only for one thing."

"And that was?"

"My money gave out. Exasperating, wasn't it, when everything was working Cause and Effect.

It was a perfect day.
Fleecy clouds floated lazily across the azure depths of the heavens.
"We are certainly discovered," exclaimed the first sea serpent, in much agitation.

The second saurilan of the deep was at no pains to conceal his irritation.

"I felt sure something of the kind would occur," he observed, "if they did not quit making such awful juleps at the hotel."—Detroit Tribune.

"Professor," said the fond mother, after introducing; the young lady by her side, "I have brought to you my daughter Eleanor, who needs a few finishing touches to her education. She paints, sings, plays and is well up on Ibsen, Tolstoi, Browning and the modern French decadents. Now, what can you do for her?" Nothing, ma'am," said the private tutor. "Do you mean that?" said the mother, flushing with pleasure.

"Yes, ma'am," said the tutor, sadly;
"She is hopeless."

Mamma (disappointed)—I thought Mr. Plunkley was going to propose last night, Daughter—So did I. Mamma—Why didn't he. Daughter—He did.
