Similar expressions of regret were uttered on all sides, as Baron Herschell was universally respected. His career was highly remarkable. For years he got no business at the bar, and was contemplating emigration to Canada or Australia, as the only means of making his way in his profession. His chance came in a big commercial suit, and thenceforth his progress was so amazingly rapid that he was the youngest Lord Chancelior England ever had except one.

Baron Herschell is succeeded by his son, just 21 years of age, and leaves a widow much younger than himself, and two daughters. He had a large and lucrative practice and had amassed a handsome fortune. His pension, $20,000 a year, as Lord Chancellor, dies with him.

meeting of the National League magnates, which has been going on at the Fifth-avenue Hotel for the past three days, came to an end to-night. The magnates passed the Rogers amendment to the constitution without any change.

They passed the Brush report on the Board of Discipline, after making some important changes. They adopted the report of the Rules Committee, after certain modifications had been made. They passed a resolution which has a direct bearing upon the disposition of the St. Louis franchise. They did not take any action upon the Philadelphia admission question. Col. Rogers did not bring the matter before his brother magnates. They did not adopt a schedule for the coming season. One amendment was passed to the National agreement. The magnates adjourned subject to the call of the president.

When they met to-day Col. I. Rogers of Philadelphia, read his proposed amendments and after some discussion, they were unanimously adopted without any material changes.

The Boston magnates scored a complete victory in their fight on the rules, which were next discussed. The rule relating to the grounds was wiped out entirely. Substantially all of the other rules submitted to the league, by the committee, consisting of Messrs. Hart, Reach and Hanlon were adopted.

The proposed amendment to rule 42 was the one that Boston fought. The proposed rule provaded that any ball hit over a fence should entitle the batsman to a home run. except where the fence is within 285 feet of the home base.

A Day's Delay Cost $40.000.

Two brothers named Berry, among the Klondike's richest miners, have held and worked two valuable caims, 6 and 7, on Eldorado for a considerable time, taking out over $150,000 for the season. The lease lapsed, and by a mistake they failed to renew it until one day after the grace allowed, in the meantime a man who knew the facts jumped the claim. The brothers protested, but the court held that the jumping was quite legal, and the owners had to pay $40,000 to get their property back.

Another Rich Placer.

Another Klondiker, named Plamonden, tells of a rich strike at the head of the Klondike River. "Go'd," he said, "has been coming down from the headwaters of the Klondike River quite frequently this whater and many a miner has pushed back towards the Rockles with a light outfit.

"Just before I left for the outside some miners came in and reported a rich strike at almost the very source of the stream. It was back in the low mountains, where the river that has made so many men rich is hardly as large as some of its branches further down. Nuggets worth $2 to $3 were said to be plentiful. The miners also told of several rich quartz finds. A small stranped followed the arrival of the men."

Steam thawing machines are being used in the Klondike for the first time this year. The experiment is proving very successful and threatens to change the manenr of mining entirely.

Owing to failing health the deceased was compelled, two years ago, to resign his position, and a trip to Los Angeles, Cal., was proposed, hoping that with a rest from business and the favorable climate of the south a rapid recovery to his former health would result. The change of climate had not the desired effect, and about two months ago Mr. House returned to his home here. Everything possible was done to stay the ravages of the dread disease, but he gradually sank until death relieved him of his sufferings. Deceased was respected by a host of acquaintances, and his death has left a vacancy which will be hard to fill. Statesman's Abilities.

London, March 2.—Baron Herschell's death was a profound surprise to legal and political circles here. Although no apprehension had been felt here as to the result of the Baron's accident, it now appears that he had cabled last week to Lady Herschell, who had been staying with other members of the family at Cannes, to join him in Washington.

That the call was not urgent is shown by the fact that Lady Herschell expected to arrive in London next Monday, to sail the following Wednesday for New York, in the gymnasium a rampa Boys' tent was erected, and a number of curiosities were also exhibited.

the ablest, clearest-headed judges of the English bench. Edward Blake, M. P., who practised largely before him in the Judicial Committee of the Prlyy Council, and knew him well, said this evening:

"The news distresses me beyond words. He was a great judge; one of the most lucid intellects that I have ever known. I sat beside him at the Canadian banquet given him before his departure to the United States, and he said:

"If hard, work can settle their questions I shall not fail," He was a perfect glutton for work. He delighted in it and was always ready to add to his judicial labors. Witness his acceptance of the presidency of this commission and at the same time representing England on the Venezuela Boundary Commission. This makes his sudden end all the more tragic and deplorable. "He was full of mental and physical vigor, and possessed talents of the highest order. He was a splendid judge. It was an intellectual treat to argue a complicated suit before him, for he put every side of it with unerring judgment."
