OF FEDERAL AUTHORITY

Wide Open Powers Given by Dominion Charters Beginning of Trouble.

Discussing the suspension of the two St. Thomas Loan Companies, Dr. Hunter, registrar of friendly societies, said to The World yesterday that the Dominion parliament began the trouble by giving power to loan companies to buy stocks as well as to lend on them The one leads directly to speculation, the other is a perfectly legitimate transaction. The Dominion went a transaction. The Dominion went a long way in giving companies power to buy stocks, whether they are paid says that Doan's Kidney Pills are far ahead of doctor's medicine. to buy stocks, whether they are paid up or not. The first danger was that the Dominion did not insist on the up by a general act in 1898, called her the General Loan Companies Act, by which any provincial company could in effect declare itself a Dominion company and get these wide open powers. It was actually holding out an invitation to these building societies to come and take advantage of the act.

In 1886 it was admitted that the Dominion government had no jurisdiction over these companies, but in 1898 they moved forward to scoop in all the companies and invite them to take out new charters. "It was my duty," said Dr. Hunter, "to advise the government here, and I pointed out the ernment here, and I pointed out the gross interference with provincial jurisdiction; and Premier Hardy addressed a long despatch to the Ottawa government protesting against their invasion of provincial rights. They struck out some of the clauses, but in 1899 they passed the act in its present shape—the Loan Companies Act.

Applied for Registry, "It was under this act that the Elgin Loan Company received a special comferer about 18 months ago. This company was incorporated 24 years ago as a building society. After they received letters patent under the Dominion Act of 1899, they made application for registry as a Dominion Company, but on looking over their papers I saw what they were driving at. There were several bad legal papers I saw what they were driving at. There were several bad legal flaws in their application, and I refused them registry. That blocked the way, and they had either to continue as a provincial company or get relief to overcome my decision. When the House met they came down and asked us to pass a special act validating their Dominion charter to get over the legal difficulties, but they Attorney-General refused that. It was seen that we would be making ourselves responsible for anything they would do, and all the government would do was to pass a vesting act, transferring the assets to the company incorporated under the Dominion Act. That was a request that could not reasonably be refused."

Saw Their Mistake. When the crash of the Atlas Company came, Dr. Hunter went on, the directors of the Elgin Company saw they had gone too far. They wished they had gone too far. They wished they had gone too far. They wished to withdraw the vesting act, but it was too late. The application was received at the department on the same day the company closed its doors. They need not have taken advantage of the powers conferred on them by the Dominion charter, but the people would say they were in the same boat as the Atlas Company, and confidence would be destroyed.

Dr. Hunter said with emphasis that the Dominion government had no right to deal with trust companies or loan societies. But if they did it was most dangerous to allow them to buy stocks that are not paid. The Dominion government ought to say to the companies that they were within the jurisdiction of the province.

Powers Under Local Act. The Provincial Act was originally framed to allow building societies to lend money on lands. It now permits the companies to lend money on fully paid stocks, but they must be 'Canadian stocks' If the directors want to go outside and buy American stocks they must call the shareholders together and secure the consent of two-thirds, and even then the whole amount invested in outside stocks must not exinvested in outside stocks must not exceed 25 per cent. of the paid-up capital.
