BABY MURDERED

Tracked Down. Detective James H. Forrest, who was doing duty at the race track, was called into the city and was given charge of the case. His investigations led to the arrest of Josie about eleven o'clock Saturday night. He went out to the Carr home and took the two little girls to see Mrs. Murray. They failed to identify her, as the woman claimed to have been in the house at the time of the murder. Forrest became suspicious of Josie's story because she claimed to have taken the woman and child at eleven o'clock in the morning. Those living in the house with the Carrs went to the Carr home. Forrest followed them out there and made inquiries of some school-children and ascertained that Josie was not at school on Friday, as she ought to have been. From the stepmother, Mrs. Carr, he learned up and found that she had not issued any baby's clothing. He also learned that Josie's conduct was not always what it should be. He had a further conversation with the little girl when she finally admitted that she had taken the child and had disposed of it.

Blamed on Posters. She claimed the babe because of seeing the posters of the melodrama "Kidnapped in New York," which was playing at a local theatre last week and which represented the abduction of the Marlon Clark child by her parents, and founded on fact, for ransom. She said she thought she would reward whoever returned the child. Josie was brought up, and at midnight was with the matron at police headquarters, charged with murder. Investigations showed that Josie was a girl of about 12 years of age. He has already traced four carriages which have been stolen, and also two bicycles. Her mother, who lives at 123 West Avenue, was shown by Josie that these were to go to people with whom she had some acquaintance and tell them that her mother and her mother had separated, and that they had no further claim on the child's care. She would sell them for what she could get and give a receipt in her mother's name. How many names she could get and give a receipt in her mother's name, how many names she could get and give a receipt in her mother's name, how many names she could get and give a receipt in her mother's name.

Josie's story of throwing the baby down the embankment is not supposed to be the true one. The child was not shown that it had come in contact with any dirt. The hill leading down to the gully is covered with coal cinders from the railroad track, and had the baby rolled or been thrown down the hill, it would have been covered with marks of the fall. The theory is that the baby was carried, wheeled, or pushed in the go-cart to the bottom of the ravine, carried into the culvert and there undressed and left to die of exposure in the mud. It is a question if the post-mortem will show that the infant died of violence; that Dr. Caven was wrong that death was due to suffocation or drowning.

Coroner Johnson will open an inquest tonight, and it will be adjourned for a couple of weeks. Dr. C. Robinson, K.C., has been retained by friends of the family for the defence. The post-mortem was made yesterday afternoon by Dr. John Caven. Post-mortem a Mystery. Dr. John Caven of Spadina-avenue conducted the post-mortem over the body of the little Murray baby at the city morgue yesterday afternoon. What injuries were the cause of the death of the child will be made known at the inquest, which will be held this afternoon. Chief Coroner Johnson was asked as to the nature of the injuries and referred the reporter to Dr. John Caven. When Dr. Caven was interviewed he said that Dr. Johnson had not given him the liberty of making a statement. Questioned as to why the result of the post-mortem was not made public Dr. Caven said that its outcome might defeat the ends of justice. As to whether the blow over the head caused death Dr. Caven said it was a matter of importance to the police and detectives, and declined to say anything further. It seems strange if the post-mortem has developed such important evidence that action was deferred for a whole day instead of its being conducted on Saturday afternoon. If the detectives are to be aided in any way by the result of that investigation, why were they kept Detective Forrest deserves great credit for the able and rapid manner in which he has almost closed this which looked at one time, most mysterious case. He met with rebuffs on every side. Obstacles were thrown in his way by the children with whom he had to deal. They all seem to know how to out-guess him, but he has managed to overcome the little brother who went with Josie to secure the clothing, and to him, when questioned the younger denied knowing anything of the matter. Even the promise of a nice bag of candies would not make him tell the truth, but when two bags were promised he finally nodded in the affirmative and consented to show the way to the cache. It seems that Josie has been a little millionaire among the youngsters and that when well trained, and they absolutely refused to give the officer any information that would be of use to him.

After her arrest, Josie was turned over to the custody of her father, James Mitchell, who lives at 115 King street. She was visited by her father last evening, and told her the story. James Mitchell admits that she was with Josie on Friday afternoon, but claims that he was not with her when she was with the girl when she took the baby. The only person so far who acknowledged having seen a girl or woman with a baby carriage in the neighborhood on Friday afternoon, was a man working in a field some distance away. He says he remembers seeing either a girl or woman pushing a baby carriage along the railway track, but that he was too far away to recognize her. Car, the father, is a well-set, dum-sized man, with a shock of blonde hair. When seen by a World reporter yesterday afternoon he had a broad grin on his face and was sweeping out the "lean-to" in the rear. When asked for information regarding the little girl under arrest, Carr, gruff and surly, announced his intention of refusing to talk. The mother of his little girl apparently had been a crushing blow, and he did not intend to have the past of his little one pried into.

Mrs. Carr, the stepmother of Josie, a faded, quizzical-looking woman, said nothing. About the house the children played on the bed in their room, wholly unmindful of the fate of their sister.
