SPINNERS' TROUBLE MAY BE ADJUSTED

It has almost been accepted as a truism, he said, that the Sahara desert receives an amount of solar heat every day equivalent to that produced by 5,000,000,000 tons of coal; and in this vast region, with great quantities of produce available from the wonderful forest land nearer to the coast, the economy traversed by a network of railways, thoughtful scientists say that "if some economical method can be found to utilize this lost solar energy, there is no reason why the factories of the future, factories enormous in extent, with glass chambers instead of chimneys, and reflectors instead of furnaces, all designed to receive and transmit the daily gift of the sun's heat, should not be established there.

A Hit for The Poor Golfer

Golf as a popular game has brought with it a golfing complaint. It is called golfer's neuritis and the cure, as carried out at Guy's Hospital is hypnotism.

The experiment was first of its kind for a complaint which is also believed to be the first of its kind—looked place in a large hall at Guy's before an assembly of medical students and doctors. It was carried out by a well-known specialist, aided by an equally well-known hypnotist. The victim of the new complaint was an amateur golfer who, up to the time that he broke down, was a fine player.

For a long time his complaint puzzled the doctors. Instead of hitting the ball with his old force and accuracy, he found himself absolutely incapable of even swinging a golf club when the ball was in front of him.

Physically he was in perfect condition, and nerve specialists diagnosed that his absolute helplessness was due to over-concentration on the game, with the result that the nerves had struck work so far as golf was concerned. It was to coax them back to their job that a course of hypnotism was decided on. The experiment aroused much curiosity in the medical world.

The patient was put under hypnotic influence and simply told that he could hit a golf ball and could play the game, and that he was to go away and try. The result was seen later in the day, when the patient, who was quite cheerful, turned up at his golf club and, without the slightest difficulty or hesitation, drove a long and accurate ball from the first tee—the first that he had been capable of driving for some months.

The result was reported to the specialist in charge of the hypnotic experiment, who expressed himself thoroughly satisfied with the result.

A tragic crisis has been reached in China with regard to the traffic in opium. Heavy financial commitments, it is alleged, stand in the way of Great Britain's duty in this matter, and, unless the force of public opinion can be brought to bear on the government, one more disastrous chapter will have to be added to the history of a traffic which has brought moral ruin to China while enriching the coffers of the Indian government to the extent of $4,000,000,000.

Yielding to the pressure of the banks and the merchants interested, the government has decided that China, while retaining every nerve to suppress the cultivation and use of the drug in her own dominions, and even to the extent of putting to death those who violate her laws on the subject, is to be compelled to continue to buy the drug.

The "Republican Advocates of China," of January 14, contains the following article: "China is now on the horns of a dilemma in the opium crusade. Yielding to the request of those who deal largely in the pernicious drug, Great Britain is going to bring pressure upon China for alleged non-observance of the Opium Treaty, and will probably hold her responsible for the accumulation of large stocks of unused opium in Shanghai and Hong Kong, estimated to be worth about $60,000,000 in value. Whatever truth there might be in the alleged statement, surely the missionaries in China, who have always shown such anxiety for the moral and spiritual welfare of the Chinese people, will not fold their arms and keep quiet over the crisis. For the eradication of opium is a moral question, and if they do not assist substantially, and sincerely in the fight they fall in their duty towards humanity. We know they will say that they are prevented from interfering in politics, but they have always interfered in Chinese questions. Then why single out this one? Oh, where are the missionaries? Come to our rescue if they are really working for our good."

MORE ABOUT NEW FRENCH LIGHTING

The invention is expected to revolutionize the naval and military searchlight system, and its commercial use may be much more numerous even than these enumerated.

The Ex-President

M. Fallieres, the retiring president of the republic, has been telling about his plans for the future. "I am going to resume the life I led formerly in Paris when I was president of the senate, and on my estate in the country. For a month at Easter and during the four months at the long vacation I shall be a simple vine grower. I am eager to be among my hands, not that I own a renowned vineyard, but I like my vineyard to be among the most carefully cultured in the whole country. I know quite well that an ex-president may recommend a political career, there is nothing to deter him; but all the legislative offices for my department are filled. Moreover, I am seventy-one, and there are younger men waiting for legislative positions. I have no other plans. Perhaps I shall travel a little. Our country is so beautiful that I have been desiring to see it in the manner I desire."

Asked to give some impressions of his presidency, M. Fallieres said: "I am glad of this, that I have always preserved my good humor."

A Paris Tragedy

A tragedy of affection in which the man was sixty years old and the woman fifty-six was described in the Seine senate court. Jules Nozpep, a basket-seller, formed an attachment for Marguerite Hallin, a street hawker. At first she returned his affection, but afterwards left him. "I cannot live without her," the old man told his neighbors.

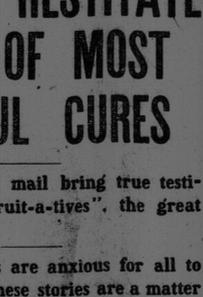

An attempt at reconciliation took place, but when Nozpep's advances were rejected he became furious, fired twice at the woman and killed her.

His advocate, Maitre Campinchi, pleaded to the jury: "The intonations of autumn leave more regrets because they must needs be the last. Have pity on old folks whose hearts are not yet ready to die!" The jury yielded to his plea and found that extenuating circumstances existed; and when the court imposed a sentence of ten years' imprisonment the juror signed a petition demanding a reduction to five years.

"Open the window, waiter! I am roasting," said a customer who had just dined at a restaurant. "But it isn't winter; it is frozen," protested a man who had just sat down.

The writer hastened. The proprietor settled the dispute at once. "They the customer who has not yet dined!" he said. "Some of the inhabitants of Marcinelle, a suburb of Charleroi, are about to leave the town because they believe it is infested by malignant 'ghosts.' The residence of the Van Zanzen family has been the principal target for 'ghostly' attacks, which have resulted in the partial demolition of the building and the smashing of all the windows. M. van Zanzen endured mysterious showings of stones and other misdeeds for several days, without being able to discover the perpetrators. He then complained to the police.

Captain Vandermersch, chief of the gendarmes, with six men, went to the house to assist in the search for "ghosts." The gendarmes were stationed in various rooms, yet the strange attacks began immediately after luncheon, in accordance with the usual custom.

Showers of stones and pebbles rained against the windows, and the crash of broken glass sounded in all the rooms. Captain Vandermersch and his men were driven from one room to another by the heavy fall of debris, apparently flung from outside. They were unable to discover any persons in the vicinity, and although they often climbed on the roof, there was no satisfactory explanation of the attacks.

The next afternoon the shower of stones continued from noon until 3.45 at two-minute intervals. M. van Zanzen and his family have left the house, which is now in a semi-ruined state, with shattered walls and gaping window frames. Police and soldiers are watching the house night and day.
