The painter was perched on the scaffolding, thinking himself safe from prying eyes, but the foreman, unseen down below, had been watching the slow, mechanical strokes for a good while.

"Mind you don't fall, painter!" he shouted up.

"Oh, that's all right, sir, I'm as safe as the bank up here," replied the startled painter.

"Asleep, I meant," said the foreman, as he trotted away, and as the sound of a faster beat of the brush reached him, he knew the hint had been taken.

WOMAN MOUNTAIN CLIMBER'S RECORD Ascends Himalayas 21,000 Feet—Porter Plunges to Death

Paris, Oct. 2.—Mrs. Fanny Ballock Workman, a mountain climber, writing from Skardu, in the Himalayas, on Sept. 2, sends the first detailed account of an accident which gave rise to the report that she had been killed by an avalanche.

"We were crossing Bilapho Pass at about an 18,000-foot height, when an Italian porter named Chompa, who was carrying the rope, strode ahead. I was about three paces behind him when suddenly without a word or a cry he disappeared, carrying the rope, which was the only means of extrication. Having only one extra rope remaining, the head guide called down the crevasse and a faint reply showed that Chompa, who was far below, was still alive. She started after the head guide, who was back in an hour and a half, when Chompa was extricated from an 80-foot depth. He was still conscious and was carried to camp. Everything possible was done for him, but he died the same night from shock."

The letter describes the work of the expedition on the Siachen, or Rose Glacier, which is the largest and longest in Asia. During nine days in July Dr. and Mrs. Workman and three Italian guides made the first ascent of four important snow passes at two sources of this glacier, the heights varying from 19,500 to 21,000 feet, which constitutes a record for glacial exploration.

For six weeks all the camps were above 17,000 feet and the cold was often intense. Grant Peterkin, a London surveyor, was enabled, owing to favorable weather, to map the entire Rose Glacier. Mrs. Workman's expeditions of 1911 and 1912 make the hitherto unexplored Siachen the most thoroughly explored of any of the Himalayan glaciers.

It was Black '77, the famine time in Ireland, when Jack Keely, from Carlow, arrived in New York. He was soon hailed by a policeman, who asked him where he belonged.

"I came from Carlow," Jack replied. "And what state is that in?" inquired the policeman.

"Well," answered the Irishman, "it was in a horrible state when I left."
