LASTING GLORY OF LEGION NEVER LISTED

There's a Legion That Never Was Listed; That Carries No Colors or Crest; But, Split in a Thousand Detachments, Is Breaking the Road for the Rest

(By a British Comrade)
In connection with Britain's effort in the war, everyone has read with grateful pride of the fine work and brave deeds upon all the fronts of the Scots, the Irish, the Welsh, the Indian troops, the Canadians, the Australians, New Zealanders, South Africans, Newfoundlanders and most other branches of the British Empire.

But there is another group that is distributed haphazard along our lines in France and Flanders, Macedonia, Palestine, Mesopotamia and elsewhere whose presence is often sorely felt by our enemies, though the group is hardly ever mentioned anywhere. Its individual members have earned a surprising number of awards for distinguished service so that, as individuals, our house hears a good deal of them. But not as a group. By the accident of circumstances, members of this group are sometimes labelled "Canadian" or "Australian"; but when they belong to home units they naturally get no label indicating their membership of any particular group. They simply have a notable part of the British effort in the war.

Twenty years ago and more the Empire's poet told the world a good deal about this group, after long and affectionate study of many of its members. He wrote: "There's a legion that never was listed."

That carries no colors or crest. But, split in a thousand detachments, is breaking the road for the rest." The same poet referred to the members of the group as "The Gentlemen Rovers Abroad," and there are few families of note in England which have not contributed a younger son to the band. Germany has never bred any equivalent to the "Legion that Never Was Listed."

And perhaps that is one reason why her leaders misled their Emperor in 1914 with the assurance that the members of this scattered branch of our House, like the settled branches in the different Dominions, welcome the excuse provided by war for cutting the painter and severing all connection with the mother country. It naturally was not possible for the people of the machine-made, machine-drilled parvenu German necessities of travel, so furiously hurried had been their voluntary uprooting. None of them were satisfied by the rate at which their steamers carried them, hurrying over all the seven seas to the recruiting offices of Mother England, where, had they so chosen, they could have made their attestations in a hundred different dialects, and recorded their last place of residence in all the most remote and out-of-the-way settlements of the world's farthest beaches.

Invaluable Services.
In the fighting lines of the different British Fronts these men have ever since been rendering quite invaluable services. The adventurous spirit of enterprise which first sent them on their travels and secured them the freedom of the Legion that Never Was Listed had found abundant scope among the hazards and chances of front-line life. The self-reliance and unflinching resourcefulness acquired by them in their different bids for fortune and misery among the world's outside places, have been of priceless value to them and to our cause in No-Man's-Land in the trenches, on patrol, in attack and in defence.

And, aside from the distinction they have won in actual contact with the enemy, they have accomplished miracles, and put in an enormous amount of steady, persistent effort in the Allied cause—the cause, as they saw it, of Liberty, freedom, justice, and democracy against the arrogant menace, the lawless assault of the Central Empires' military despotism. At the same time, hushed about their various ventures, many thousands of Britain's gentlemen, adventurers who never have claimed citizenship of any other land than that of their birth, in these grey islands, flung aside, as though of little worth and no importance, all the multifarious concerns into which, with all the rather reckless enthusiasm of their wanderer kind, they had sunk their whole capital of energy, ability and money, and raced headlong for the nearest homeward bound steamer.

Many of them actually left houses, cultivated lands, mines, pearling ventures, machinery, contracts, half-completed "deals," concessions, dear bought treasure of one kind and another, literally to take care of themselves, to be seized by the first comer, to revert to the jungle or the wilderness from which they had been won.

The Legion that Never Was Listed received no rallying up notices; no touch of compulsion was ever laid upon them, or, in the nature of things, ever could be; and a thousand obstacles lay between them and the carrying out of the one ambition which at this moment possessed them: to the exclusion of all lesser things. Many of them lacked passage money and must needs work their passages; others lacked the ordinary cause which has become far more than the cause of the Allies, and is recognized by those who work for it, and by many whom circumstances make "neutral," as the cause of humanitarianism and of civilization.

Many of them have found such graves, laid to rest there by comrades whose affectionate respect and admiration they had won. Many you shall find among the permanently blind, halt and maimed; and these are just as cheery as the indomitable band of their comrades who still carry on the best traditions of their roving clan upon the different fronts.

The chances of war they accept as philosophically as they met the chances of adventure in the richly educational life they led before the war. There are no men living who will endorse more heartily, or with a better light, the recent words of the First Lord of the Admiralty.

"I will tell you who is going to stick it out. We are. Past master of the art of sticking it; men whom no conceivable combination of circumstances can convert into what the Americans call 'quitters'; the gentlemen adventurers of England will be in at the death of the German peril, and in the meantime are cheered by their comrades on all the British fronts as choice spirits among the best pals and the finest fighters in the world."

Hunting Ground of Hurons . Now Favored Holiday Haunt

ON MUSKOKA LAKES

The regions pictured here are in the Highlands of Ontario, and were the hunting grounds of the Hurons before the ships of Spain turned to the westward from Palos. The Hurons selected in these Highlands of Ontario some of the loveliest districts in Canada. The scenic beauties, the health giving atmosphere and the excellent fishing are now attracting a steadily growing army of visitors. One day's journey from most of the large centres places the traveller in Muskoka, Lake of Bays or Algonquin Park, and the Grand Trunk lines thread the territory in such a manner that every point is made easy of access. From the train you may visit the outfitter stores and then launch out into the deep woods by canoe. Whole families now spend their vacations camping in Algonquin Park. Fleets of steamers give service over the Muskoka Lakes and the Lake of Bays. While these districts have lost none of their primitive loveliness every form of recreation has been provided, including golf links for the devotees of the royal and ancient game. There are modern hotels for the lover of social life and quiet spots for those who wish to be near the heart of nature, while in Algonquin Park log cabin camp hotels have been constructed back from the beaten paths of travel, which combine primitive surroundings with the comforts found in hotels in large cities.
