Why, howdy, Pap Samp parture from Beckett's Mill. Though four years had passed since that time, Sim had never returned, and the people of Possum Ridge were no wiser as to his whereabouts than they had been the day he left. A large reward had been offered for his arrest, and the officials, stimulated by the hope of earning the money, had made strenuous ef forts to locate him. But it had been all in vain. Now and then there had come reports to Beckett's Mill to the effect that Sim had been captured; but, as is usual with such reports, it always turned out a case of mistaken identity. Pap was wondering where Sim could have gone to hide himself so completely and whether he was still among the living. He was wondering, too, whether if Sim still lived he would ever return to Possum Ridge and if he returned what would be his fate. It was with such thoughts as these the old man was busy when he was suddenly aroused and shocked by some one close to him saying quietly:

"Why, howdy, Pap Sampson?" Pap started and looked quickly around, and, his eyes falling on a bearded, sun tanned face, his mouth fell open and he stared in stupid amazement for almost a minute. Then he rubbed his eyes and stared again. "Lord a-massy!" he exclaimed at other replied; "what's left of him any-Pap was down off the fence in the twinkling of an eye, and the next moment he had Sim by the hand, shaking it with a heartiness that was almost painful.

"Great land of Goshen!" he cried. "Who'd 'a' thought it? Lord a-massy! It's shore old Sim, ain't it?" "I guess it is, Pap. Are you surprised to see me?" "Surprised to see you! Why, Lord, I wouldn't be no more surprised if the sky was to drop. But think of the devil an he's shore to make his appearance, as the old sayin goes." "Were you thinkin of me?"

"Jest been a-sittin thar on the fence a-wonderin whar you'd gone an what had 'come of you an if I was ever a-gwine to git to see you any more. I was jest a-gwine over them thoughts when you moughty nigh skeered the life out of me by speakin to me that a-way. Land, don't hardly seem like it can be you, Sim."

"Don't it?" "Shore it don't. But whar you been all these years?"

"I've been to the war, Pap." "Great day in the mornin! You ain't been fightin into the army, have

"Yes, I've done some fightin." "But you wasn't killed, bless the Lord."

"Not quite." "He came next thing to it, though," Sim's companion volunteered.

"Is that so?" Pap cried. "Waal, I'll be smitched! You come moughty nigh gittin killed?" "Yes, I had a pretty close call once." "Great land! Tell me all 'bout it, won't you, Sim?" "Yes, but first you must tell me somethin, Pap. How is Loueesy?" "Lord, ain't I a great old fool, a-runnin on here that a-way, never a-thinkin 'bout what you'd nat'rally be jest a-dyin to know? Loueesy's well." 'Where is she-up at the old place?" "La, no! She ain't lived thar sence ou went away. She's down at town."

"What is she doin down there?" "She's workin in a store to earn he Sim was surprised.

"To earn her livin?" he repeated.
Pap nodded his head. "What's become of all the land I left her?" Sim asked. "It's thar jest as it was. She ain't never teched a foot of it." "Why?" "Said it was your'n an she didn't deerve it." Sim paused a moment, then said:

"An Melvin?" "Lord!" Pap exclaimed. "Don't you cnow?"

"No. Did he an Loueesy"—
"No. He was killed the day you face, an expression in which surprise and relief were blended. "Didn't you know 'bout him bein killed?" Pap asked. "No. I have never heard from home sence I went away, an don't know anything that has happened. Who killed him?"

The man who came with Sim looked quickly up and appeared to wait eagerly for Pap's reply. It was then Pap noticed for the first time how pale and emaciated that man was. "Who killed Melvin?" Sim repeated

"I don't know," Pap answered. "The next mornin after you left Jim Thorn found the dead body in your woods with a bullet hole through it. He had been killed several hours then." "And nobody knows who done it?"

Pap shook his head. "Was nobody suspected?" The old man turned away and began to thump his cane against the ground, but he made no reply. Sim saw that Pap's action meant something, and he began to put a few things together. He remembered that he had gone into those woods with his gun about the time the killing must have occurred and then had disappeared. He remembered also the threat he had made that day in Mrs. Mann's wheatfield. Relast. "Am I dreamin, or is that r'ally calling these things and noting Pap's behavior, he was quick enough to suspect the truth. Pale, but firm, be said: "Pap, was anybody suspected of kill-

> The old man hesitated still, but finally he replied: "Thar mought 'a' been, Sim; yes, I'm afeard thar mought 'a' been. But, Sim, I ain't never suspected nobody." "I know, Pap. But who did the others suspect?" Again Sim's companion leaned eager ly forward and seemed to await Pap's reply. After a short pause the old man said slowly: "You know, Sim, thar's allus some people ready to suspect anything bad of a body if they've got a ghost of a reason. I-le's go on home, Sim. guess you must be tired an hungry." "No, Pap, not now. You must tell me the truth."

"Oh, Lord, Sim, I can't tell you no more." "Yes, you can tell me who

"I'd ruther not." "Then it's true, Pap. It is me?"

"Tell me," Sim insisted, "is it me?" "I'm afeard so, Sim; yes. I'm afeard har's some as thinks it was you. But I don't think it." Sim had known what was coming, but Pap's admission was a hard blow for all that. His head drooped, and an expression of bitter pain came over his features. Pap saw and understood and, placing his hand on Sim's shoulder, said consolingly:

"But I don't b'lieve it. Sim, an nobody'll ever make me b'lieve it for a minute if they sw'ar to it on a stack of othles never. The old man's act and words did Sim good. It was a great comfort to know that he had one true friend at least. "I know, Pap," he said, "that I can always trust you. You'll stand by me to the last."

"An thar's others." Sim said. "Thar's Sam Morgan an Jason Roberts. They'll never b'lieve me guilty either, will they, Pap?"

"That's what I will, Sim, 'cause I

Pap was seriously troubled, and he showed it. "Sim," he said, "I know you uns must be tired an hungry. Le's go on home an talk afterwards."

"No," Sim replied; "I want to know the truth, the whole bitter truth. So Sam an Jason b'lieve me guilty of such a terrible crime as that?" "I dunno," Pap answered.

don't want to b'lieve it, Sim. I know they don't want to b'lieve it." "But they do," Sim said, with a sigh of resignation. "Waal, so be it. An Loueesy"— Pap raised his hand instantly, and a beam of pleasure lighted his face.

"No, Sim," he interrupted, "don't you say that. Loueesy don't b'lieve it an never has b'lieved it. When she first heard you accused, she said it was a lie, an she's stuck to it from that day to this." "Thank God!" Sim cried fervently. "If she don't b'lieve it, I don't care what anybody else thinks." "She don't, Sim. I'm tellin you the God's truth. She don't. An now we've said enough for this time, so le's go on home." But Sim did not move, and he had become deeply thoughtful. After a lit-

"I don't know what I had best do. This is all so new an unexpected to me that I can't jest see my way clear. If I stop here, I'll be arrested."

In his excitement Pap Sampson had forgotten this, but he knew it was true. If Sim's presence in the village became known, he would certainly be arrested, and then the gallows, or at least the state prison, would no doubt await

"You had better hide somewhere until night," he said anxiously, "then go away again. That is the best you can do now." But Sim deliberated a long time, then said slowly: "Maybe you're right, Pap, but I don't know. A body may as well be dead or in prison as to be a wanderer on the earth, with neither home nor friends an always in dread of somethin. No matter what anybody says or thinks, I'm innocent." "I know it, Sim: I know it," Pap said assuringly. "But, then, courts mebby won't see as we do." "Maybe not, Pap," Sim replied after pause, "but I'm innocent, an I'm goin to stay." "But think, Sim, of" -"I have thought of it all, Pap. I'm goin to stay an face it out." Then Sim's companion, who had listened intently all this while, spoke up again. Laying his hand on Sim's arm, he said earnestly: "And you'll never be hurt, Sim. Never so much as a hair of your head shall be touched."

Pap Sampson looked at the speaker doubtfully. "How do you know that?" he asked. "It doesn't matter how I know it," the other answered. "I know it, and that is enough." "Who are you, an what do you know 'bout this affair?" Pap ques

"My name is Thompson, and I am Sim Banks' friend. I have been his friend since that day he saved my life at the risk of his own."

"That was nothin," Sim said. "Anybody would have done all I did." "Anybody would have rushed into that hall of shot and shell after our men had retreated and carried wounded comrade off the battlefield to save him from the enemy? You'll never make me believe any such thing. Nobody can ever make me believe that there's another man in the world
