Indian Runs Down Welves.

Charley Taylor, a half-breed Indian living at Solon Springs, a small town near Superior, is in the wolf hunting business for the bounty there is in it, and catches the wolves by running them down. He hit the hot trail of one of the timber beasts February 10 and overtook the exhausted anmial on February 22. He killed it with a stout club which he carries when "hunting."

Taylor says that there is nothing remarkable about hunting wolves in this manner. With snowshoes a man can run down a wolf, whose pace is slower in snow, in from one and a half to two days, but Taylor was without snowshoes. All one needs is endurance, patience and the ability to follow the trail of the wolf after dark. The Indians usually hunt in pairs.—Superior Correspondence St. Paul Pioneer Press.
