Mr Robert Anderson fishes for salmon on the Anderson fishing grounds above the Hermitage. Late last evening he took his boat out to the net, which he began to haul. His first pression was that he had captured a shark, for some monster fish was fast in the net, and on being disturbed set up an out rageous splashing and floundering. Although Mr Anderson had two companions, it was impossible to get the huge fish aboard his boat. So, tying a rope round its tail, they towed it in triumph to the ghore, and beached it. It proved to be a huge sturgeon, about 8 feet in length. It is the largest fish of the kind Mr Mr Robert Anderson fishes for salmon on proved to be a huge sturgeon, about 8 feet in length. They take their journeys as they do their food, trusting blindly that somehow or other it will be all right, and that the narrow corners will be shaved, and it seldom occurs to them to express their thankfulness for the manly devotion which contributes to their safety. While faith is the guiding rule of the traveller, duty is the absorbing principle of the railway servant. But does it never occur to the wakeful traveller as the lamps flash past him, as the train rushes over bridges and through a net work of signals, as the through a net work of signals, as the tunnel seems a dulled roar and the Modur Raman Khan if necessary, the lighted station a suppressed scream, when the pulse of the motion never stops and the impetus at times becomes almost terrible, what a sense of gratialmost terrible, what a sense of grati-tude there ought to be toward those disaffected, and remained faithful.
