

The Foster Brother; The Orphan of the Wreck.

CHAPTER XIV. A HAPPY HONEYMOON—A VISIT TO OLD SCENES

Long and close was the conference which followed. And with that eager avidity did George hang on the old man's lips as he described with faithful minuteness all the occurrences of the shipwreck, the voyage to the rocks, the terrible scene there with the maniac, and the sad funeral which a day or two after closed the sorrowful episode.

Not until the sun's rays came slanting from the west did George and Dan part company, and by that time arrangement was made between them that Dan should take them all three over to the Ayrshire coast on the following day.

George then proceeded up the heights in quest of Harry and Caroline, and having found them, he and them, and the wonderful acquaintances he had that day made the particulars he had learned, and the arrangements entered into for the morrow.

The morrow came—bright and calm as the day which had preceded it—and at an early hour in the forenoon they left their lodgings and went down to the harbour, where Dan had his boat launched and all things in readiness for them to step on board.

For this point they steered, and as they passed along he also pointed out to them the house on the rising ground which Kenneth and Lucy had occupied. Several other houses had since been erected in the vicinity, but these received little of their attention, that one particular building claiming all their interest.

They now neared the rocks, and saw how rugged were their peaks and ledges—saw how dangerous they must be in a storm when the waves broke in foam upon their sides, and the angry sea chafed against their relentless mass.

Dan steered the boat into the very recess where he and the fisherman, with Kenneth, had landed on that eventful morning, and fastened it to the same ring which held it then.

Harry and George took each a hand of Caroline and assisted her up the rocks. Dan followed, and they stood together on the top, gazing round with feelings impossible to be described.

The Largest of any Company in the World.

This Society has led the van in the Insurance world for many years; it has introduced the improvements and given greater impetus to the business than any Life Company in the United States, and is deserving in this respect of the praise and gratitude of the community.

There are many reasons for selecting the Equitable Life Assurance Society—

1st—No company has such large annual assessments, thereby insuring into its business a constant accession of fresh and selected lives which is one of the greatest elements of strength.

2d—Adaptability in dealing with all classes; observing at the same time, a due regard to the interests of its present large body of policy-holders by a firm resistance to any attempt at dissipation.

3d—Perfect organization in every department, which renders official information easily obtainable and secures a complete administration of the affairs.

4th—Being one of the most profitable in the world, and the most judicious in its investments, it is prepared to secure at once the most advanced improvements in the business that science can suggest.

The Equitable Life Assurance Society issues every recognized form of policy, and especially the

FOR LIFE SAVINGS FUND INSURANCE which the Company introduced. This new plan has become very popular, as equalling all other forms of insurance, and offering advantages which arise from the profits of the business, without in any respect infringing upon the normal results for which Life Insurance was first instituted.

The Equitable feels that it has the strongest claims upon public confidence. Under the management that distinguishes it and the principles by which it is guided, perfect security is given for the future, than which no greater inducement can be held out to all who wish to insure their lives.

Further information regarding the different kinds of Policies issued by the Society can readily be obtained at

THE COMPANY'S OFFICES, 120 Broadway, New York.

Or from any of its representatives throughout the United States and Canada.
