STERILIZING HANDS.
Sete sterilization of the operating of hand is an end now attained in thospitals, though not many years sould have been thought impossible, serhaps, useless. The experimental arough which the proper treatment implete sterilization was reached with the use of soap and water and eduction of a germ growth from the washed member. Washings with the chemicals followed, and the germ has produced after each, until at me could be obtained. idth Henri grays only, idth Blac PLEA FOR THE BIRDS.

USES OF PENNYROYAL.

Sprinkle a palm-leaf fan with pennyroyal tract or the oil of pennyroyal, diluted a die, and not a mosquito will dare appreach as you sit on the porch. The pennyral plant, like the Johnswort and the say, should be gathered and hoarded like as, should be gareful not to tear them up by rroots, so that more will grow. Both the lorner come out of the ground too sily for the gatherer, so take your seises along when you go hunting them. Penroyal, although far too burning to be plied undiluted to the skin, reminds us Shakespeare's saying: "Like paramaetic an open wound." It salves a wound better you get it by keeping away the noisy tle winged lancet and blood sucker. Without a doubt or question I believed
The story of the Book from God received;
And when I learned upon my mother's knee
How Christ gave up his life on Calvary.
It seemed to me that every infidel
Deserved at least an everlasting hell

I knew it all. I called myself a muff I knew it all. I called myself a min For having faith in all that silly stuff; I looked with pity on the ignorance That could not see through humbug at a glance. With pride I called myself an infidel, And thought it funny to make jokes on hell.

LOVE IN THE WOODS. She met me in a grassy glade
That slept within the wildwood,
Emerging from the silent shade
Where thrushes sang and shadows played—
Our trysting place in childhood.

My rosy, sparkling, charming girl Stood where the sun and shadow, With sunlight shuttes green and pearl, Wove fairy carpets in the swirl Of soft grass in the meadow. For winds had blown, and rains had rolled

The blades and flowers beating
In many a twisting turn and fold.
And draped the trees in red and gold
In honor of our meeting. She met me with a saucy air,
That lovely girl. She tricked me!

Amid this scene so sweet and fair.

Though comrades fast were falling.
He stood alone in trenches strewn
With carnage most appalling.

He gave to death a scornful smile For fear and he were strangers, When blood flowed free he laughed in glee, Found food for mirth in dangers.

Yet now his noble courage fails— His heart is near to stopping— It shakes his nerves when his wife observes "John, come with me a shopping."

He heard, and bowed without a wor d, His gallant steed he lightly spurred; He turned his face, and rode away Toward the grave of dying day, And vanished with its parting ray On the Llano Estaca

"Brave steed of mine, brave steed!" he cried, "Brave steed of mile, often tried,

THE DUKE'S DISLIKES.

THE DUKE'S DISLIKES.

The Duke and the Duchess of York have been taking a second little honeymoon at Sandringham. Probably Prince George has no ambition to be an arbiter of feminine fashion, but he is likely to become one if a certain story be true. According to this report he told the Princess that he was much averse to the puffed sleeve of the present style, and Princess May, like a dutiful bride, at once foreswore the fashion. Her many admirers will be only too ready to follow suit, and the honeymoon may thus appear as a regulator of tides in the affairs of women.

THE COMING DRESSES.

Tailors rejoice in the outlook just now, for plain dresses promise to become popular again, and though the most elaborate creation of frills and flutings may be essayed with temerity by the amateurs, and may be a success in the hands of a second-class modiste, the plain gown is an impossibility save to the sartorial artist. Skirts and bodices, so we learn from late advices, are to be severely plain and practical; sleeves are to be neither high nor broad, but reduced to modest dimensions, and jackets of the neatest cub are to replace the fluily capes. Buttons, so long dishonored and despised, will be used with reckless profusion as a trimming on these severe gowns, even appearing on the skirts as well as on the bodices. THE COMING DRESSES.

THEY CLAIMED THE DUNMOW FLITCH.

THEY CLAIMED THE DUNMOW FLITCH.

It is in the ancient town of Dunmow, in North Essex, England, that every year the High Court of Love is held, and wedded couples who live in peace and harmony lay claim to the celebrated "Dunmow flitch."

Baron Fitzwaiter, who, tradition says, was the institutor of the quaint ceremony, lived in the twelfth century, and to him is attributed the saying, "He which repented him not of his marriage, either sleeping or waking, in a year and a day may lawfully go to Dunmow and fetch a gammon of bacon. It is refreshing to learn that in the present year of grace three couples deemed themselves before the jury, which is composed of six young maidens attried in white and six very youthful and beardless backelors. The claimants sit during trial on old-fashioned seats "made for two," which, when the award has been made, are shoisted on long stretchers and the loving couples borne in triumph around the race course. Following them come the judge and the advocates in their robes of office, the crier proclaiming silence with the wonted formula; then the white-robed maidens and the beardless boys of the jury; lastly, the chaffing crowd.

LONDON'S FEMININE STOCK
Amy E. Bell has been for several years a stock broker in London. She has a no office hard by the Stock Exchange, and does a large business, especially among women clients. Her peculiar aptness for the profession was shown when she was a little child. An old gentleman, a visitor at Miss Bell's home, happened one day to be diligently reading the money article in the Times. He was in no mood to be interrupted, so he said to the child when she hung around him: "Run away, little gir! I am busy with my lessons, and you must go to yours." "Yes," said Miss Amy." but what's your lessons is my play!" For it was the highest recreation of the infant phenomenon to study the stock quotations.
