A Transient Experience

The northern winter sun was dropping low before he climbed high enough to see that the jagged rocks, which he had thought led up to the summit, were parted from it by a deep hollow, on the sides of which the gray boulders lay tossed about, while in the bottom was a small round them black could and supless though tarn, black, cold and sunless, though setting sun still shone on the rocks above it, and on the steep inaccessible precipice, above which stood the heap of stones which marked the summit of the Grey Man of Wardale. No, to reach that it would be necesto skirt along round the great shoulder of the mountain, and come at the top from the other side. But, under the rock and above the tarn, was a sort of broad shelf, still in the sunlight, and on to this George managed to scramble, and sat down, well shel-tered from the wind, to rest and won-ence and great victory. Here had he wrestled and prevailed, and hence had he descended, a changed man, to strengthen and to bless his neighbors.

the dark water, at the stony descent, and at the dim gray valley beneath. Round him were the tops of the sun-What had happened there to Daniel Gladwyn. What personified or visual-ised presence had come into him in awful solitude of the mountain George felt himself to be absolutely alone, no fiend, no angel challenged him to mortal combat. Only the hills themselves stood round and looked at He covered his face with his hands to shut them out, and Helena's isage filled his mental vision. After l, where was the battle? Helena was of for him. He could not give up hat was not his to keep. Whether or he had no scruples and bubts he could have made her love m, he had not done so. There was othing for him but to go back and tehave like a gentleman," and hold is tongue. Was "behaving like a gentleman" and going to his work in good time every day, the dull, tame, modern result of a spiritual force that had moved his grandfather to move his

Ah, but such common conduct meant being a better man instead of a worse It meant conquering himself, which was no easier than, and perhaps equivalent to, conquering the devil. As he sat there with hidden face, he recog-nized in himself the chance of utter defeat, the possibility of ruin. Why was he there, nearly 300 miles from where he ought to have been? but because the inevitable was intolerable, and the difference between the wise man and the fool mostly is that the inevitable can be borne.

"Yes," he thought, grimly, "there wasn't much I could do. It wouldn't to me to murder Norman, and God knows-that I wouldn't win her, at cost for her, of one pang of shame, less than ideal thought! No, I dn't. If that means that I am a couldn't. fool and my love only a fancy, so it must be, only I don't see how to live without her, as I meant to live before I lost her—before I had her. In fact, I've got to give the thing up, to have done with it. I can't traduce Norman, I know. I'm positively certain that he's an honest man, and as straight as they make them. That old duffer Mark won't know, and everybody over there will go by him. I'm the only person able to takle him. I ought, I suppose, to help to set it all straight. That's why I was at the wedding, that's why it amused me so! God help me! that is what I ought to do—somehout.

somehow. How can I?" George sat still with hidden face. His dream was over. Could he go back to Whitebury, could he stay there day by day, and work steadily when work was dull, and keep a brave face when his heart was sinking, and live without interest and excitement when the whole world seemed empty of both? Could he resist recurring im alses to give himself a little ease, to get a little variety in the dead level of a life without enthusiasm and without love? No, he could not do it. Hundreds id. It was not much, as the world goes, to do. Only what would be expected of a man of common-sense and common good feeling. But who can wrestle and prevail with the tyranny of temperament? George could not do so. He would sell his Moss Head, waste his patrimony, of Moss Head, waste his patrimony, of brain and opportunity, make a poor thing instead of a good thing, of his immediate future, fail, in fact, in what life had set him to do, be a poor schoolmaster instead of a good one. Without vivid impulses, in fact without happiness, he could not endure his life. If he had endured a dull reutine If he had endured a dull routine one day he would throw it up the next. well as that of others, and he read it truly.

He raised his head and looked around him, at the silent empty hills. He felt the profound solitude of the place. He sat there alone, and reckoned up the probabilities of his future and despaired of himself.

Where was the new force that had, Where was the new force that had, in that very spot, changed old Daniel Gladwyn from a ne'er do weel into a prophet? For his descendant there was no Angel of the Lord. "Ah," he thought, "if one could but hear the still small voice, would one not fall down and worship, and follow it to the world's end?"

end?"

Then a sudden thought came to him.

He could not do as others did, submit, go without, hold his tongue; but he could, as he knew he should do, work and help, and persuade and prevail.

He could fulfill the fate that had been begun in Ashdew Church, so long ago.

He could not stend by and see Helena's He could not stand by and see Helena's fate settled without him, but he could, he felt he could, bring it himself to a happy conclusion. He wanted more ardour, not less, stronger enthusiasm, not empty patience, intense love, not tame indifference. If the old man, by his mysterious wrestling, had power to move souls, surely not indeed a double portion, but some little share of his persuasive spirit might have fallen upon his son. 'Love's Flame" was not to be extinguished, but to be fed with selfish hopes and selfish fears, until it burned high and pure, part of the eternal fire. Such a sense of new force filled George's soul that he might well know it to be a new and spiritual presence within him. He dropped metaphors. It wasn't possible to go dully on, as if Helena had never existed, and as if he were apart from all that concerned der why he had come there.

This spot, no doubt, had been the scene of old Daniel's strange experiastic effort that his salvation lay. Not astic effort that his salvation lay. Not Here had he won that spiritual force which had made him as a prophet to his native valley.

Ing sky was soft and clear. The thin stood round about him, but they seemed to wear a kinder face. "Well." he said to himself, with a half laugh, "I George sat still and looked down at think the devil's gone out of me. shall just go back and look up Norman and offer to help him."

There was a little space during which he knelt with his face towards those hills of heaven, and then he rose and began his descent.

Conclusion of the Annual Meeting for Ontario-Mr. G. L. Wilson, of Toronto Elected H. C. R.-Next Meeting in Owen Sound.

Toronto, Sept. 7 .- The High Court of the Independent Order of Foresters concluded its session last night. At the morning meeting the report of the committee on finance was presented by Bro. Alex. McGillivray. Some discus-sion took place over the amount to be expended on extension of the order, and $2,000 was finally placed in the estimates for that purpose.

A very favorable report showing the financial state of the order in Central Ontario, was presented by the council-or on the state of the order. The High Court is out of debt, progressing favorably, and there is not a single defunct court in the jurisdic-The recommendation for the appointment of two organizers was referred committee only allowed $2,000 for extension of the order. After discussion the matter was left in the hands of

Treasurer, Atwell Fleming, Toronto; H. Councilor, W. A. Boys, Barrie; H. Auditors, Bros. Barlow Cumberland and George Chalice, Toronto; H. Orator, Rev. John J. Little; H. J. Secretary, W. J. Hetherington, Toronto; H. S. W., James Douglas, Millbrook; H. J. W., R. F. Dale, Harriston; H. S. B., W. R. Allan; H. Marshal, E. J. Hearn, Toronto; H. Conductor, J. Oliver, Stay-ner; H. Messenger, H. Reeves, To-ronto; Assistant High Messenger, C. J. Stalker, Toronto; H. Organist, J. E. Zieman, East Toronto. Owen Sound was chosen as the next place of meeting, and it was decided to hold meetings annually.

The Grand Cross of Merit was awarded to Bro. W. B. Sanders in acknowledgment of his services to the order. It was unanimously resolved that the supreme executive should be re-quested to bring before the next meeting a proposition that only delegates, members holding active office and past high executive officers, should have the right to voting at High Court meet-

The new officers were installed by Bro. David Millar, P.H.C.R., Toronto.

If a man is going to fight he wants to be well. He wants to be

TO LORD MINTO

The Pull List Will Probably Be Announced This Week-Only Three holidays. Gazetted-Both Parties Should Be Represented.

[Special to The Advertiser per C.P.R.] Ottawa, Ont., Sept. 7.—A list of the honorary A. D. C.s to Lord Minto will ottawa, Ont., Sept. 7.—A list of the honorary A. D. C.s to Lord Minto will be announced in a few days. It is probable that they will be known this week. So far only three A. D. C.s have been gazetted. They are Lieut.-Col. Irwin, Ottawa; Lieut.-Col. Otter and Lieut.-Col. Gibson, Toronto. In addition to these it is said that Gen. Hutton and his excellency the governor-general have decided on the following: Lieut.-Col. Peters, British Columbia; Lieut.-Col. Sherwood, Ottawa; Lieut.-Col. Labelle, Montreal; Lieut.-Col. Evanturel, Quebec; Lieut.-Col. Drury, Kingston. The entire list is selected from Conservatives, and the minister of militia, it is said, has declined to be responsible for it because he is of the opinion that in filling honorary positions of this kind both parties should be represented. The only Liberal on the list of A. D. C.s is Col. Cibson, who are more resident of the only Liberal on the list of A. D. C.s is Col. Gibson, who, as president of the Dominion Rifle Association, could not very well be passed over. Lieut.-Col. Gregory, who is in command of the Pacific coast, succeeding Lieut.-Col. Prior, is well known to be a Liberal, and Lieut.-Col. Peters is equally well known to be a Conservative. Lieut.-Col. Gregory has been passed over and Col. Peters selected. Liberal politicians recommended the former and Conservatives the latter, and the former will now say that Gregory has been cast aside because of his politics.

A military man stated today that while the political complexion of the parties should not be considered—although it has always been in the past just as races and creeds have been looked to-still an officer ought not to be rejected because of his politics. While the governor-general has the right to name his own A. D. C.s, it is argued that as the department of militia is asked to gazette them and pay their traveling expenses, the min-ister ought to have something to say in their selection.
