But most of them eat "FORCE" now just because it's good and they like it.

CHAPTER XV.

"Please, please wait! I hope I am not too late!" the silvery though anxious tones continued, while the astonished judge and other occupants of the room, together with the no less surprised prisoner in the box, turned to see who had burst upon the scene in this very unceremonious fashion.

She was a young girl, perhaps four-teen years old, slender and rather tall for her years, but not awkwardly so, while her face was exquisitely fair and delicate in its outline.s Her eyes were large and very blue, with an earnestness of expression that was striking in their clear depths. Her hair, a bright gold, was braided and hung down her back in a massive platt, being tied at the ends with a soft shade

She was dressed in white, very simply made, with a broad sash of ribbon in two shades of olive, knotted about her slight waist, while a broad, soft finish-French shoes, completed this inconspic. uous but very effective toilet.

She made a charming picture as she stood there before the judge, her flushed face upraised to him, apparently oblivious of everyone else in the room, and one which the gentleman never forgot. "Young lady, you are interrupting the

"TOUTS" AND "CLOCKERS"

The Brooklyn Jockey Club has decided to declare was on "touts" and "clockers." Al! such will be barred from the grounds of the club while horses are working for races. The move meets with the hearty approval of owners, who complain that hardly a week escapes the sleuths of bookmakers, and the result is a fair price is not obtainable against horses that have never been shown in public. There have been several instances this year, and it is still very young, where horses have been made favorites in races for no reason other than the work they have shown in private trials. This gives an owner no encouragement to own horses and pay feed bills, when the "touts" and bookmakers get all the benefits. While the Brooklyn Jockey Club may do much to stop the practice it is an evil that will take a heap of exterminating.

He has told his friends a number of was on his majesty himself. One of them deserves being told again.

King Victor Emmanuel is passionately fond of fishing, and his hard luck in this line of sport is almost proverbial in Italy. One day, the King told, bfe was returning from a fishing trip alone and unattended, and had only two little fishes to show for several hours' patient

Walking home towards Rome he met a peasant who was carrying a number of magnificent fish, and who asked him for a light for his pipe. Seeing his majesty's poor catch, he said, in a tone

"You do not seem to be a very good hand at fishing. Judging from what you bring home today one could almost swear that you were the King." Victor Emmanuel blushingly answer-"Never mind, your majesty," the peas-
