character of the reverses suffered by Gen. Kuropatkin last week, but as yet there has been nothing absolutely decisive. There certainly is no rout, and the war office has not yet given up all hope that Kuropatkin may be able to again resume a genuine offensive. It is asserted here that the tone which diplomats and newspapers of Tokio assumed in referring to what they seem to look upon as the closing act of the tragedy of Gen. Kuropatkin's army is certainly premature. St. Petersburg, Oct. 18–3:50 a.m.—The news from the front tonight is more reassuring from the Russian standpoint. The situation is still regarded as being critical, but Gen. Kuropatkin is apparently holding the Japanese firmly on his center and right wing, even having recrossed the Shakhe River, and while there are rumors of an extensive Japanese flamking movement, both on the east ad on the west, there is no evidence that they are actually occurring. THE BODIES WERE PILED SIX DEEP.

London, Tuesday, Oct. 18.-Correspondents describing the carnage in the battle of the Shakhe record the terrible results of the hand-tohand fighting. Whenever the Japanese stormed a position the Russians, after delivering volley after volley, would rush out of their trenches, meeting the assailants with bayonets, knives and clubbed rifles in endeavors to stop the advance. Hundreds were hacked to pieces with bayonets and knives, while others had their skulls crushed

The surgeons on both sides found it impossible to cope with the unceasing stream of wounded. The best organized hospitals were wholly inadequate for such furious fighting. Thousands of wounded lay on the field for hours without attention, or crawled in pitiful agony, seeking selp and shelter. Thunderstorms increased the agonies of the wounded, many of whom cried to passersby to be put out of their misery, or to be taken out of the rain. Rivulets from the hillsides caused by the downpour were crimsoned with blood. Some of the heaviest Russian losses were among the Jewish, Finnish and Polish regiments. Bodies lay sometimes six deep after the hand-to-hand struggles.
