Henry Irving. It was said of Garrick, by his friend Johnson, that his death not be consonant with his art and his lofty professional purpose. He took a serious view of his calling and no actor of modern times did so much to justify it. He believed that the true function of the stage was to be a teacher of the masses, a great moral and artistic uplift. He bent his energies toward realizing his ideal with a devotion and self-sacrifice which, perhaps, constitute a greater claim on the remembrance of the public than his genius as an actor. With him his art was first, and moneymaking second. He made and lost fortunes, and died poor, because he insisted on the highest standard of achievement, lavishing money on some quarters to make believe that meet a deficient popular taste. The modern stage if directed by the spirit which animated Irving, would become ica at least, that it makes any contribution to the higher life of the

It is "education through play." Froebel saw that all children play, and learn through their play, but the education that a child gains, playing by himself, is too desultory to be of much value. He said: "I see that the children delight in movement. . . . I can contrive motives and means for the same exercise of the limbs which will result in increased power and health, and train the children to a conscious command of their bodily functions. . . . I see that they use their senses, but merely at the accidental solicitation of surrounding circumsances, and therefore. imperfectly. I can contrive means for a definite education of the senses, which shall result in inceased quickness of vision, hearing, touch, etc. I can train the purblind eye to take note of delicate shades of color, the dull ear to appreciate minute differences of sound. . . I see that they observe; but their observations are for the most part transitory and indefinite, and

By article 341 e. (1905, c. 14, s. 2) any erson desirous of so acting is required o first obtain a license therefor, such license being granted for one year and expiring on 1st May. The penalty for so acting without a license is a fine of not more than $1,000 and not less than $500 for each contravention (article 341 f). The fee for a license is $300. (Article 341 h). The licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors by sample or on commission are fixed by article 64 of the license law, 63 V. c. 12, and for goods, etc., to be imported into the Province.

These enactments have proved very vexatious restrictions on inter-Provincial trade and it certainly would be a good thing if the Local Legislatures could be prevailed upon to repeal them. They are defended on two recial grounds: (1) That they are ecessary as aids to increasing the Provincial revenue; (2) That it is only fair that outsiders wishing to do business in a Province should pay taxes so as to be placed on an equality with business men resident in the Province who do, and it is pointed out that in this respect municipal bylaws in nearly every center of population put transient traders on something like an equality with permanent residents. In answer to this last argument it is contended that established business houses, paying taxes to the Federal Government, in the shape of customs duties, should not be classed in any Province as transient traders. British Columbia, or Quebec, or Prince Edward Island may derive a small revnue by taxing travelers from Ontario but they might lose more than they gain if Ontario chose to treat them same manner. Technically these taxes may be within the rights f the Province, but they constitute n interference with trade and comnerce, contrary to the spirit if not he letter of the British North Am-

The sentence pronounced upon Gow, who killed the boy Hill in Dummer Township, Peterboro County, is being criticised as inadequate, but it is a credit to Canadian justice that the trial jury pronounced against him, in the face of strong local sympathy. One of Sir William Mulock's last official acts was to open an avenue of opportunity for an unfortunate class, the deaf and dumb. He offered to give nem employment in the postoffic etter sorters, a work which they can perform as well as anyone else. Sir William has not posed as a philanthropist, but this act shows him to be a man of genuine kindness of heart.

It is pleasing to be able to contradict the story that the consumptive Lephard died in the isolation hospital at Galt without attendance. The Galt authorities, to their credit, provided him with a nurse and he had constant medical attention. The experiences of the poor fellow before he found this haven of refuge were, however, a reproach to the Province.

worry is caused by ill-working cook stoves and ranges; by ranges that draw poorly; that have such complicated drafts that only a skilled mechanic can manage them; whose grates are so constructed that it is a strong man's work to shake them down; ranges which work well when the wind is in a certain direction, but act like a fiend at other times; ranges whose work is so unreliable that the housekeeper is in a constant nerve-racking worry lest the meals be late or the baking spoiled.

The Pandora range is built to make work easy, a child can shake it down; its drafts are so simple that one learns them in a minute; its heat is kept in the range so effectively that you can do a big baking and hardly know there is a fire in it two feet away; it keeps the kitchen cool; it saves you worry; it saves you time and money; it saves you backaches and headaches, because it is so easy to manage and so reliable.

The Pandora makes kitchen work easy.
