ANADIAN standard grades for eggs intended for the export market have been in force for four years. The system has proved to be a great success in establishing confidence in the quality of Canadian eggs abroad. It will have a similar effect in establishing confidence in Canadian eggs at home.

The Government advocates standard grades for domestic consumption. Ask your grocer for graded eggs. To determine the quality of eggs, the dealer "candles" them, and puts them in the grade to which they belong. The Government has laid down specific definitions by which Canadian eggs are graded. In grading eggs, the following are the principal factors taken into consideration: Weight, size of air cell, firmness of white, and density of yolk.

Four Grades of Eggs

1. Specials Eggs grading as "Specials" are attractive in appearance when cooked alone or in combination with other foods, and give a delicious flavor to the prepared dish. These eggs are not found on the market at all seasons.

2. Extras Eggs grading as "Extras" are very satisfactory, giving good results when cooked alone, or in combination with other foods. These eggs can always be obtained and should prove very popular as the housewife can be sure of the results from this

3. Firsts Good eggs, which may be scrambled, fried or used for any other cooking purpose, but not of the uniform quality of "specials" and "extras."

4. Seconds This grade comists of eggs which may be used for baking and dishes in which eggs are used in combination. This grade includes stale eggs and eggs with watery whites and heavy yolks.
