Albert's son was standing by, and was sent back by his father for something, Witness went a little way down the hill, and waited till he saw the boy returning with what he thought were handcuffs. He then went down the hill with Albert, and rowed out in his boat 200 feet, when he heard the plstol go off. He could see Al-bert shooting evidenbly in the air. Albert had called to the boys to come in, as he wanted to arrest them. The boys paddled away rapidly in the direction of the ice-house, and Albert ran round to the railway track and seemed to beckon to some one. Witness heard a whistle two or three times. But seeing that he has not profited by your example of prudence in keeping within the bounds of moderation, I feel it my duty to call the attention of your readers to a few of his brilliant periods, netwithstanding my previous resolve to take no notice of any champions of Professor Smith and the Irish landlord's laws, who had not the courage of their convictions. For it does seem strange to see men writing so much about the morality and justice of these laws under the guise of a nom-de-plume savoring so much of the cunning, deceit and cowardliness of an informer, which was, however, in his case somewhat appropriate and thoroughly descriptive of the actual state; of his mind on Irish affairs. As it is a well-known and historical fact that even the most intelligent of the Saxons are perfectly ignorant of the sort of government they maintain in Ireland and the miseries that flow from it. If your "Saxon " correspondent is so familiarized with history as he pretends to by his letter. he will, I think be forced to admit, that I have not overstated the case, nor done very much injustice to Dr. Smith; and should he not do so, I would refer him to a most instructive article on Ireland in the June number of the Fortnightry Review, where Mr. Henry George, after enumerating some of the various grievances that the people have to complain in vain of, concludes by saying, " in fact nothing better shows why one people should never attempt to govern another people than the utter ignorance of Ireland that prevails in England." If that be the condition of Englishmen, who are within ten hours' sail of Ireland, it is not unnatural to find Saxons on this side of the
