But where could we find a body of capitalists that would venture now to build another railway between Toronto and Montreal to compete with the Grand Trunk and the syndicate? The difference between the two kinds of cases is vital, fundamental; and it is apparent at a glance. In professing not to see this difference the Times is surely affecting a degree of stupidity which it would not like to be charged with.

Men may come and men may go, but a republic will go on forever, provided its real principles are practiced and upheld, and the chief one is government by the people and for the people, and not government of the people by one or a few persons.

There appears, says our contemperary, to be a general impression prevailing among business men that the government is not at liberty to establish a telegraph system and work it without infringing upon the charter rights and privileges of the companies already operating lines. It seems to be taken for granted that if the government establishes a system of its own for the benefit and protection of the public that it will be under some kind of sn obligation more or less binding to buy up the property and franchises of these companies' at the comformal department of the current in the basin on the Canadian side of the current tainly by, instinctive, effort. It is sheer nonsense to suppose a dead man's course would be diverted to the Canadian side from the main current. On the contrary, if the body left the centre at all the course it would take would be towards the escape on the American side. On the Canadian side he had an adverse current to encourter and although he had come in encounter, and although he had come in contact with rocks still on he came a considerable distance before he sank, and the normal attitude of the consummate swimnormal attitude of the consummate swimmer never left him. Prialysis resulted from the concussion of the head with rocks.

I am persuaded Captain Webb's death was caused by this accident. Had he kept straight on in the centre of the current to nearly that point in the basin—erroneously called the vortex—but in reality where the water finds equilibrium, or the force of the current is balanced, and Standard. Mr. Alexander Corpi, who reached the capital this morning after twelve days detention among the brigands in the neighborhood of Ismidt, gives the following narrative of his misadventure : "On the afternoon of Thursday, July 5, I was given orders for some alterations outside the building occupied by my silk factory, when suddenly I was surrounded and seized by nine individuals of suspicious appearance. I asked what object they might have in securing my person, whereupon they stated that they wanted money. I remarked that I had none on me, but if released I

I had none on me, but if released I would give a promissory note for a reasonable amount. That the brigands, for such they were, declined, and finally they hurried me off on foot to a spot eight hours distant, where a halt was ordered by the chief of the party. The brigands then formed a council to decide upon the most suitable place to take me for the purpose of communicating with my family, in the near vicinity. Ismidt was selected, as offering every facility in this respect. On Sunday, the 7ch instant, we reached the spot agreed upon, which is situated in a mountainous district some two hours from the town of Ismidt. Negotiations then commenced for the purpose of fixing the amount of raasom. The first figure named was £60,000, but finally, after several days bargaining, they consented to take £1000. Means were then found to dispatch as messenger to my family with the news of to effect my release. According to agree-ment, I had explained in my letter that the amount of the ransom was to be ac-companied by not more than three men. These formalities being complied with, two trusted servants of my family in charge of the money at length reached the scene of my captivity. The gold pieces were counted, and I was declared a free man. The captain of the band returned me the cash I had with me at the time I was captured, and handed my servants four liars for their trouble in bringing the ransom. Indeed, from first to last I had no reason to complain of my treatment. A man servant and a woman cook were told off for attendance on me. I had many chats with the brigands, who were all Greeks. They showed considerable fore-thought for the welfare of the rural population by expressing the hope that my mis-adventure would not lead me to give up working the silk factory, as such a decision on my part would entail misery upon a number of villagers who depended upon their employment there for their daily bread. 'You need have no fear in future,' they added; 'we will guarantee your safety.' Before separating from the band we became such excellent triends that the chief hinted ha had an important carriers chief hinted he had an important capture chief hinted he had an important capture in view, and that, if successful, he would return the whole of my ransom." Immediately that Mr. Corpi was out of the hands hands of the brigands the Turkish troops were sent off in pursuit and every effort is being made to capture the band.

the flash, and at least one-enth of a second must elapse—according to Professor Swan—before our sluggish sight can take in the full effect of the light. On account of the slowness of our perception we never see the light at its real intensity. Professor Tait has suggested that the full brilliancy must be in some degree comparable with the sun, as Wheatstone's and Swan's date prove that the apparent brightness of the landscape as lit up by a lightning flash is less than one hundred thousandth part of what it would be were the lightning permanent. The apparent brightness, it should be mentioned, was shown by Swan to diminish in about the ratio borne by the length of time required for us to perceive it. G. A. SCHRAM 4 KING ST. EAST TORONTO.

The victory cost the champion a serious illness, and in the following year Dr. Lacha', who had attended him, read before the academy of medicine a curious paper, in which he declared his conviction that, with the exception of a Basque named Lorion, who had been accustomed to consume fifteen pounds of bread a day, Mouchet was the greatest eater that ever lived.
