ed to many objections with the hope of excluding the evidence entirely, but when His Lordship ruled that certain decuments sworn to by Aylesworth as being in the handwriting of Harry Hyams should be admitted as standards of the prisoners handwriting, they made an offer of compromise with the Crown in order to prevent the proving before the jury of the fact that their clients not only obtained possession of the money, but obtained it through forgery. His Lordship apparently agreed with the defence that it would be better for their clients to admit the facts without the hearto admit the facts without the hear-ing of the testimony, and the last half hour of the morning session was hour of the morning session was spent in endeavoring to arrive at terms of mutual agreement.

Proof of Metive Fully Admitted. The consultation was continued for half an hour after the opening of the court for the afternoon session. Finally an agreement was reached and Mr. er rose to make this statement to

The evidence tendered of Mr. Ames and two or three other witnesses, and the evidence of Mr. Smoke, now under consideration by your Lordship, is ten-dered by the Crown with the view of having the total amount of money the proceeds of this insurance reaching the proceeds of this insurance reaching the prisoners. In giving this evidence, I, as the Crown officer, might have to give evidence of certain collateral facts which are perhaps not strictly relevant to the issue, but which will necessarily come up. Having regard to what is fair and proper on the part of the Crown, I have after discussion with Your Lordenin in the presence with Your Lordship, in the presence of counsel for the prisoners, arrived at the conclusion that I should accept certain admissions which the prisoners through their counsel are willing to make in order to avoid the necessity of calling these witnesses, thus putting the matter in a more simple form to the court and jury. The result of checking over the various vouchers and bank accounts comes to this, that prior to the marriage of the prisoner H P. Hyams with Martha Wells the sum of $5500 was received and not account accounts. H P. Hyams with Martha Wells the sum of $3500 was received and not accounted for; $1900 of this sum went to pay the joint debt of the prisoners, viz., the chattel mortgage of Dr. Mc-Pherson. That money was the proceeds of the insurance in Martha Wells' hands. After the marriage, the prisoner H. P. Hyams, in large sums, received $14,300, the last large amount being represented by a draft for $7950, produced by Mr. Rice, manager of the Imperial Bank. Apparently after that sum, only one amount of any size, $350, was received by H. P. Hyams from his wife. The total sum, apart from small cheques not in the whole aggregating a very large sum, amounts to $14,300, of which some $3180 came directly into Dallas Hyams' hands. Now, that being admitted by my learned friends to the fullest extent, I refrain from giving the further evidence that I giving the further evidence that I was tendering to Your Lordship when this discussion arose. I have stated the nature of the discussion, so that the jury might know just what was going on. The giving of this admission by the prisoners through their countries.

Detective Cuddy also told of going to the office of the prisoners one week after Wells was killed, to enquire about the insurance on Wells' life. He met H. P. Hyams, who said he did not know the amount of the insurance. Cuddy then started for 213 Mutual-street, the residence of Mrs. Aylesworth, to see Martha Wells. He had been in the house only for a moment when Harry Hyams came in, and walked through the house. Some 15 minutes elapsed before the witness was able to obtain an interview with Martha Wells. It was a good 15 minutes' walk from the house in Mutual-

At exactly 3.40 p.m., the Crown opened its medical testimony with the evidence of Dr. John Caven, Professor of Pathology in the University of Toronto Medical Faculty. Dr. Caven told of the exhuming of the body and the holding of the post-mortem in the presence of legal and medical representatives of both defence and Crown. Then followed a description of the injuries to the skull. The Doctor carefully prefaced his remarks on this line with the statement that he could not speak with reference to any injuries to the soft parts. The head, he said, was considerably flattened, and the right side should signs of very great injury. One could seed it consists injury. One could readily appreciate that it was very badly broken up. Speaking of the fractures, he said that starting at the root of the nose, one line of fracture ran directly back and through the centre of the skull. Another fracture runs from ear to ear, dividing the skull into two unequal Several other lines of fracture branch out from the right perietal em-inence, and run in different direc-tions across and around the skull. Three Points in the Crown's Case.

Three points in the descriptive evi-ence to which Mr. Osler asked the witness to devote more particular discussion, and explain clearly to the jury, were the fractures of the condyles at the base of the skull, the complete disarticulation of the left zygomatic arch, and the absence of a zygomatic arch, and the absence of a portion of the right internal angular process. The first and the last the Crown claim were caused by the blow from the ax which felled Wells, and goods that best please their customers. the second by the blow which produced the wound which seven witnesses swore to having seen over Wells' left Indications of Two Lines of Force.

"On the right perietal perturbance or thereabouts," answeeed the witness. Continuing, he said that when the head received the blows which caused the fractures, it must have been resting on the left side, with the zygomatic arch resting. The fracture of the lower jaw would indicate that the zygomatic arch had been supported. The point of greatest impact was the right perietal protuberance.

"Do you find any definite indications of a second line of force shown by the condition of the base, but that might be a result of the blow on the side."

"It hink there is a second line of force shown by the condition of the base, but that might be a result of the blow on the side."

The Importance of the Piece of Glass, A witness has described the breaking up of the right eye of the spectacles and the bending in of the frame, and another has told of the finding of a piece of glass in the right eyebrow; do these statements assist you in coming to a conclusion as to this second line of force?"

"As to the driving in of the eye, that is a physical impossibility; it might have been ruptured so as to cause it to look like a driving in. If the glass was firmly embedded I would say that the driving in the driver is the driver in the driver in the driver in the driver is the driver in the dr

Continuing, the witness said that the application of force from before, backwards, was the natural inference from the condition in which the skull was found. Everything, except the fracture to the internal angular process could be accounted for by the general application of force to the right side of the head.

The opening services of the International Fraternal Congress at St. George's Hall were accorded a very light attendance yesterday morning, though during the day a number of though during the day a number of delegates dropped in, swelling the attendance to about 100. at the hour of adjournment. Mr. S. A. Wills of Pennsylvania presided at the meeting and there were noticed delegates from nearly all the fraternal organizations of the continent. An address of welcome was delivered by the president. F. G. Inwood, of the Fraternal Association of Canada, and complimentary addresses were made by the vice-president, secretary and the past president, the former outlining the history and progress of the association.

The annual report was presented by President Wills and listened to with deepest interest by the delegates present. During the past year, the report is said legislation and in the four progress of the second progress of the association.

The annual report was presented by President Wills and listened to with deepest interest by the delegates present. During the past year, the report said, legislation had been secured in Pennsylvania that helped the fraternal societies very considerably and attention was drawn to a ruling made by the finsurance commission of Ohio to the effect that all societies should make a report relative to the insurance done by them and that the body would be subjected to the assessment law of the State. There are but three clarly defined and distinctly separate systems furnishing life insurance at present in the United States.

The Foresters' concert at Massey Hall last night was attended by an audience which packed the hall. The feature of the evening was the playing of Anne Lachaume, a pianiste, who was heard here as the conductor of "L'Enfant Prodigue." He played with all the delicacy, and power, and en-thusiasm for which he is famous and gave an exquisite rendering of the "Moonlight Sonata." Achille Rivarde, the new violinist, showed himself an the new violinist, showed himself an artist with great temperamental fire and a fair technique; Wieniawski's "Airs Russe," which gave scope to his emotional side, was beautifully done.
