We learn from this document that, in 1841, the revenue paid into the Exchequer In a long letter in the Lor monototic to CAS of the Sected and amounted to £48.084.359, while the expenditure reached £50,185.729, the deficiency being £2,101.370. In the last two years of war, 1854 and 1855, the revenue, expendiwar, 1894 and 1895, the revenue, expendi-ture, and deficiency have been much greater. In 1854, the revenue amounted to States witnesses—Strobein and Herty £55.822.509, and the expenditure to £60 .-031,567, while the deficiency reached to $\pounds 3,209,059$. In 1855 the revenue was increased to £63.394,605, and the expendi-ture to £83,505,788, while the deficiency Frampton, a man of unquestioned hopo swelled to the large sum of $\pounds 21,151,183.$ — In both years, ihe deficiency was provided for by loans and Exchequer Bills and

The fluctuations in many of the prime sources of revenue from the extreme points sources of revenue from the extreme points compared, that is, from 1841 to 1855, both included, are worthy of notice. In 1841 the Customs yielded $\pm 21.868,845$, but in 1855 declined to $\pm 20.967,752$. In the same periods the Excise increased from $\pm 13,-678,836$, to 16,889,486. The variation in the stamps was trifling, but shows a de-cline. In the Post-office the increase has been enormous. In 1841 that department yielded only £455,000; but, in 1855, $\pounds 1,-137,220$. As would be expected, the great source of revenue has been the Property-tax. It did not exist in 1841. In 1842 it only gave £571,055, but had not then come with activity. into full play for a whole year. In 1643 it yielded 5,249,261, but in 1845 it poured into the Treasury £13,718,185, a trifle more than the Excise in 1841. As the Property-tax, in some form or other, is likely to be permanent it may be well to exhibit its sustaining power. In 1841, when not levied, the revenue amounted to £48.084,349; in 1855

t amounted to £63,364,605 : difference in indelity of the Suitan as an excuse. The excess, £15,274,246, to which the Property-tax contributes £12,718,185; so that in-dependently of it, all the other sources of revenue together only return an increase to the city to the Pilgrims, under pretence the exchequer of £1,561,061, comparing the years 1841 & 1855—an incontrovertible proof that the working classes, compared with the propertied classes, have relative-ly made but a trifling advance in their command over the good things of this life.
