

important is the Steam Mill of Messrs J. Cunard & Co. This Mill is two stories high, 112 by 60 feet, to which is attached an engine house, 40 by 42 feet, and there is now in course of building, very extensive wharves, blocks for securing the booms, &c. The mill contains five gangs of saws, three circular do., with machinery for hoisting in, and cross cutting the logs, which are propelled by a very superior Steam Engine of about fifty horse power. This undertaking was commenced only last September, and is expected to be in efficient operation in the course of a few days, a striking illustration of what wealth and enterprise can accomplish in a short time.

On Saturday last, her proprietors gave a general invitation to the inhabitants, to meet them at the mill, and such as attended early in the afternoon, had the satisfaction of seeing her make a trial of her abilities, which was quite satisfactory; and there is every reason to expect, that after a little rectifying, necessary at all times in the erection of new machinery, she will perform her work in such a manner, as will meet the wishes of her spirited and enterprising owners. At six in the evening, a most substantial repast was served up, of which upwards of 300 persons partook; and although we cannot speak of the "feast of reason," or the "flow of soul," we can positively assert there was something more substantial, in the shape of mutton, veal, ham, beef, cheese, bread, &c.; and as to the flow, it was most copious, consisting of wine, (red and white) brandy, ale, porter, &c.; and it is not to be wondered at, that with such good fare, the company should be well pleased with the liberal donors, and that the greatest good humour and harmony should prevail. A number of appropriate toasts were drunk and sentiments delivered, and the company broke up as the shades of evening closed in, giving three cheers to the success of the enterprise, the workmen chairing Messrs Frost and Pettie, the architects, and thus conveying them to their dwellings.

On the following morning the poor people were requested to attend at the mill when the fragments of the feast were distributed among them.

While speaking of recent improvements, we may also mention that during the last year Messrs Willistons have erected a Saw Mill at Black Brook, which has been in successful operation some time; and although we have not had an opportunity of personally inspecting her, we learn from persons who are far better judges than we pretend to be of machinery, that she is a very excellent mill, and the lumber she has sawn is of a superior description.

We wish every success may attend these undertakings, as they must add considerably to the extension of our trade, and consequently to the prosperity of the place.—Gleaner.
