"at £100,000. The revenue officers, who acast their votes as the Government directed a them, controlled seventy elections. Three a members, it was estimated, were " plurned by one:hundred and sixty persons a All this time Leeds, Birmington and Mana chester were unrepresented. Seals were appenly offered for sale down to the start ever of the Reform Bill. Hastsigs had been so often sold for £6,000, that her market price was perfectly estab-"lished. Badbury publicly advertised herself for sale. Generally the purchaser was exa perfed to belong to the same political party with the majority of his constituents, but sthis was not indispensable. A man was good purchasing the representation of a place called Petersfield, and the price, which was being adjusted in pounds, was raised to guineas, because he was on the strong side of politics. The members who bought their seats sold their votes, and thas ande their outlay reproductive. At one period George the Third supplied money, almost openly, to buy seats and bribe members. Till 1784 the polling might constinne for six weeks. In that year its duraation was reduced to fifteen days. Throughout that awful period violence and diunkenness prevailed without restraint. The unhappy constituency which was the victim of a contested election could searchly have suffered more if it had been subjected n to bombardment." (Great applause)
In 1832 the Reform Bill was passed. By

it the English people at last acquired some control over public effairs, representation, comed to be a fiction, it became a reality. From that date there opened a giprious and happy era of legislation for England and Ire land. These reforms were not half measures nor were they selfishly confined to England alone; their blessings extended throughout the Empire, from far off Hindostan to the West Indies, throughout every country under the British flag we a they felt, not alone in Great Britain and Ireland, Canada had her share, and thank God, Trained profited to some extent. (Applause.) Workmen were allowed to combine to increase their wages or to redress their grievances; why should Ireland be refused that right to-day; what is her agitation but a mistity strike against bad laws and oppression? Catholic Emancipation made our fathers once more free men; slavery was abolished not only among the dark children of Africa but in the factories and mines of Eugland herself. National Education, Free Trade, the Municipal Laws, the Penal Laws, the Navigation Laws, the Poor Laws, the claims of Dissenters, the Irish Courch. the Irish Land question in a degree, all these subjects received the attention or the English retormed Parliament. Everywhere wrongs were redressed, liberty cetablished, and efforts were honestly made to do justice to all classes, and the work is not yet completed. It is therefore right to say that as soon as the English people, the true English people, attained power, they immediately get to work to repair the mjuries which their forefathers had permitted to be wrought against all classes in England, Ireland and Scotland, and nowever we may hate and execrate the it famous government of times gone by, we cannot but see friends in the English people of to-day. As education will extend, as popular power will increase, we may rest assured that the influence of the other classes will decrease, and we will see on the side of popular rights hundreds of writers and speakers who now bow down before the prestige of rank and money. (Applause.) Re-form must be gradual, but it will surely come. The Land system of England and Ireland the Laws of Pamogentture and E .tai , the game laws, the privileges of classes, are souses which no country in the world would telerate. The teachings of Political Economy condemn them, the position of the people in the three kingdoms offers the greatest contrasts seen in the world. On the one hand a mail and privileged class of wealthy landowners, on the other a multitude of friendless, helpless peasantry, with no hope in their jouth and menhood to rise above their Capita; the laster only $17. miserable condition, with no prospect in eleage but the poorhouse and a pauper's grave.

—Dives and Lazants. Their wrongs cry to Heaven for tedresa; surely, inevitably, grievances will be redressed, and by some measure just to the owner and just to the offer of the soil, the reformed Parhament of England will give to both peoples such interest in their country, in its roil and its fortunes, that pros-

"That we have beard with pleasure the conseat given by Mr. F. A. Quinn, advocate, of Montreat, to devote his labor and tune during the coming legal helidays to the propagation of these principles, and we respectfully call upon our conutrymen throughout Canada, and upon all lovers of fair play, irrespective of race or creed, to make such arangements as they may deem advisable to hold meetings in their respective localities, where the rights and claims of the Irish people may be tairly, honorably, and temperstely discussed. Moved by Mr. Brown, seconded by Mr.

(Loud appiarse)

Mr. William Brown on rising was greeted by the audience with applause. He opened his remarks by stating that when the President of the Branch of the Irish National Land Limitue he had repestedly refused, but had at last consented. He simply wished, in a few broken sontences, to express his deep 66t sympathy with the frish peasantry is in their struggle for buman liberty. H considered himself one of the oldest Land Leaguery in Canada, and read aloud a letter in the Brook ville Recorder, dated 1860, proving the fact. He considered the question an economic question. The present English system result on political economy, which was a simple intence that the humblest mind could; understand. The speaker quoted at length the works of Dr. Anderson, Sir Ed. West and Ricardo. The former celebrity bad Which was build to the land owner for the same, we would have no reut. The difference between the good and the poor land went into the pocket of the landlord. The man who tills the soil is the man who has a right to what he brings forth. It was useless to talk of compensation, for that would only be shifting the blund-r from the right shoulder to the left. Mr, Brown concluded a LOSS OF THE SHIP "MONANTUM." PARTICULARS OF THE DISASTER.

Sr. Johns, Nfid., Dec. 17. - The partienlars of the loss et the ship Monantum, during the territic gale off the Highlands' St. George's Bay, last work, state that the crew put off from the vissel in two boats. One of the boats, with six men, capsized, and all were drowned. A lifeboat with 11 men capsized, losing the provisions, water, and ears. The crew held on and righted her, after twenty hours of exposure, cold and hunger, washed by chilling spray. The boat reached the shore, and the men wandered about the uniniabited, barren shore eight days, all dying of bunger and exposure except two, who were rescued by a couple of men going to the sea coast. The Captain was found alive, but died soon after. The two survivors are not likely to live long. An arm of our of the dead men was found exten to the bone. and it is supposed by some of his companions. The coast between St. George's Bay and Cape Ray is strewn with wreckage. Other tales of disaster will probably soon be made.
