FANATICISM LET LOOSE.

Are the days of Stockport come back upon us—is the demon of religious persecution again let loose, and are we to be plunged once more into that boiling sea of sectarianism...

What was the crime of the nuns? They were Catholics—meet cause enough for their murder in the eyes of those men. The canting knaves whose forefathers were driven to seek in mountain cave and fastness for a spot wherein to pray...

The Rev. Patrick McKay, Catholic Priest at Magheralin, attended on the 15th of last month (July) at a confirmation held by the Bishop, Dr. Blake, at Legoe. Late in the evening he returned home, or rather towards home, being accompanied part of the way by another priest...

but the innocent inhabitants of a whole district, would be punished to the last extremity of the law.

The Priest recovered—he rose from that bed so near being his death couch, but not with the resolve to use even a just scourge of legal chastisement on his would-be murderers. He knew that however deserved that punishment, if he dared to seek for it, and if it were applied, his life would some night pay forfeit at the hands of those lawless ruffians patronised by the British Government...

IRISH INTELLIGENCE.

On Sunday the 3rd ult., the Right Rev. Doctor Vaughan, Bishop of Killaloe confirmed over 600 in the Church of Kilrush. Notwithstanding the memorable oppressive heat of that day, His Lordship strictly examined more than half of those presented in their knowledge of the Christian Doctrine.

THE MAYNOOTH AGITATION.—We have reason to feel flattered at the attention which our remarks on the Maynooth question have received. It is true that our views have been roughly assailed by journals which still hold the principle of Protestant ascendancy...

THE PRISONER UNDER SENTENCE OF DEATH IN CORK GAOL.—Since the sentence of death has been passed upon the unhappy man who now awaits his execution in the county gaol a most gratifying improvement in his moral feeling and general demeanor has taken place.

this question discussed in a more conciliatory spirit than some of our contemporaries are disposed to do. We cannot convince men by railing at them, but by our own open, sincere religious conviction...

CELEBRATION OF THE BIRTHDAY OF O'CONNOR.—A few friends and admirers of the departed Liberator, desirous to testify their appreciation of his great efforts in the cause of Ireland, dined together on Wednesday, August 6th, at the King's Hotel, Philadelphia.

NEW PERRAGES.—We understand that Lords Fermoy and Talbot de Malahide will be created peers of the United Kingdom—the former by his present title (the legality of which has been denied by the House of Lords), and the latter by that of Tyrconnell, which has been extinct for nearly two centuries.

HONOR TO BELFAST SHIP BUILDING.—We derive much gratification from observing that the magnificent and powerful screw steam-ship Kheronese, of 2,300 tons, launched at this port in October last by Messrs. Hickson and Co., (builders of the Circassian), has been placed on the line between Liverpool, St. John's Newfoundland, Halifax, and Portland.

THE CROPS.—Within the last week, some spots of the old disease have manifested themselves upon the leaves of the potato, but only to a slight extent. It has been remarked that the blight has made its appearance almost entirely with the extreme sultry weather which has set in this last week.

THE MILITIAMAN CONDEMNED TO DIE FOR HIS SHARE IN THE NENAGH RIOTS has not yet received the pardon of the Crown. The people of Nenagh, and, indeed, of Ireland generally, can scarcely believe that the execution of this unfortunate fellow is possible.

MONSIEUR TONSON, THE AERONAUT OF THE DUBLIN PROTESTANT ASSOCIATION.—The Dublin Protestant Association, some days ago, forwarded a memorial to the Lord Lieutenant, complaining of Mr. O'Callaghan's decision in the case of assault, committed by a man named Timothy Kelly on "two pious and inoffensive characters, employed in their praiseworthy and laudable avocations as Scripture Readers."

It is wonderful how "circumstances alter cases" and "rebels at Cork are patriots at Madrid." "The day will come," said a speaker about "oppressed nationalities, the other day in England, "when, liberated and free, Hungary, Poland, Italy..."

Ireland has always been more or less misgoverned, and, as a result, in the latter half of the nineteenth century, discovering the value of its population, as well as of its soil. However, it is never too late to mend. The progress of public works in Ireland—the improvement of agriculture—the introduction of new forms of cultivation—an enlightened system of draining—the construction of great roads, railways, canals, bridges, docks, harbours—are beginning to discover to us that we possess a great empire at home, more valuable by far than ten distant colonies.

The leading journals, which have always been so prompt to denounce what they call "Irish crime," and rail at "Irish indolence," and which even now rarely lose an opportunity of indulging in a sneer at our expense, took good care to slur over the services of the Irish soldiers. They were invariably classed under the generic term "British soldiers"—their separate nationality was never alluded to; but on the other hand, the Press teemed with special laudations of the Guards and Highlanders as such, or, in other words, of the English and Scotch.

The exodus of the Irish people will, in fact, be regarded by history as one of the most remarkable features of the present century. Unhappily, it is going on still, and that to such an extent as to leave the market, in many parts of Ireland, almost deprived of labour. Every man lost to the country who could have found profitable employment at home reflects disgrace on the rulers of the country.

The body of a soldier of the 109th, drowned last week, was found on Tuesday evening floating in the Suir, nearly opposite Grannagh. The body was conveyed to the barracks; an inquest was held on view of it on Wednesday, and a verdict of accidental death returned. The deceased was interred with military honors in the burial ground, New-street, Waterford. Tipperary Vindicator.
