IRON MEN-OF-WAR.

In the matter of iron-cased ships the French Admiralty have taken one life, and our Admiralty has taken the other. The French have convinced themselves that iron-cased frigates will supersede all other vessels as fighting ships; and they are building a new navy, therefore, as fast as they can do it.

The French, it is true, are building all these vessels, but they are building them very inefficiently. Our Admiralty can see all their mistakes as they go on. It seems as certain as possible that in 12 months time their models will be utterly superseded.
