

enabled more than 17,000 young Canadians to travel to destinations throughout the world, and brought roughly the same number of young people from other countries to Canada.

DFAIT manages four types of program: the Working Holiday Program, the Student Work Abroad Program, the Young Workers' Exchange Program and the Co-op Program (work/study abroad).

Aimed primarily at youth aged 18 to 30, the programs do not provide financial assistance. Instead, they help young people obtain temporary permits to work in another country, and they provide advice on finding temporary employment abroad. This is an opportunity to acquire useful skills without disruption to the labour market in Canada or abroad. Participants can become acquainted with the culture of their host country and with globalization issues—an unforgettable experience.
